This Wonderful Feeling

In spring of 1999, Peninsula Women's Chorus artistic director Patty Hennings had a dream: that PWC could work with school children to help them write poetry which could be set to music for the chorus. PWC collaborated with California Poets in the Schools, the largest writers-in-the-schools program in the nation. Poets collaborated with PWC members who were elementary teachers in the Bay Area, working with nearly 400 students. Joan Szymko was one of three composers commissioned by PWC to select and set poems from the project. The two young poets Szymko selected for "This Wonderful Feeling" were in the third grade when these poems were written.

1. saboo
   What will we do
   saboo saboo
   walla kaboo
   Should we jump off
   the tree?
   Will you play with me?
   saboo, saboo
   walla kaboo
   and I love you
   Wallakaboo
   ~ Anna Madrigal

2. In My Quiet Place
   In My Quiet Place everything is quiet.
   Quiet as the butterfly on silent wings.
   Quiet as a leaf falling through the air.
   Quiet makes me feel like I am the only one on earth.
   The first to find this wonderful feeling inside me.
   ~ Mary Whitney

3. Purple Night
   Purple as a purple sky on a Sunday night.
   Purple as a dark purple dress.
   A purple dress on a purple night, a purple world and a purple bird in flight.
   ~ Mary Whitney
Jabberwocky

"Jabberwocky" first appeared in Through the Looking Glass (1871), the sequel to Alice in Wonderland. It was written by Charles Dodgson under his famous pseudonym, Lewis Carroll. The ultimate satire of heroic narrative poetry in English literature, it foreshadows a major trend in twentieth-century writing in its eerie and evocative use of nonsense words. This setting emphasizes the mock-heroic aspects of the poem, and it is a parody on the musical devices and attitudes of large, traditional choral works. It should be performed, however, with utmost seriousness and formality, exactly as if it were the sort of work that it imitates.

Sonnet

In this composition from 2013, David Harris folds together six different texts attributed to William Shakespeare: sonnets 18, 56, 104, 105, 128, and Act V, scene 1 from Merchant of Venice. The overlapping texts, Spanish-influenced guitar, and close harmonies all work in concert to express the dizzying power of love.

Voices of Broken Hearts

This richly creative setting by conductor/composer Steven Sametz draws a few select lines (highlighted in bold here) from Carl Sandburg’s Clark Street Bridge:

DUST of the feet
And dust of the wheels,
Wagons and people going,
All day feet and wheels.

Voices of dollars
And drops of blood
. . . . .

Voices of broken hearts,
. . Voices singing, singing,
. . Silver voices, singing,
Softer than the stars,
Softer than the mist.

Now...
. . Only stars and mist
A lonely policeman,
Two cabaret dancers,
Stars and mist again,
No more feet or wheels,
No more dust and wagons.

The composer sets this in such a way that most of the poem is whispered by a “ghost chorus” of a few singers. Further, he specifies that in the second iteration of the performance, the choir should move each to her own rhythm, collecting at specified moments, which produces an effect of continuous phasing in and out of clarity. On top of this, he weaves a digitally delayed viola part, which flows around and through the phasing. The effect is otherworldly.
Improvisation on a poem by Rumi

This term, Viking Chorale has worked on a variety of ensemble improvisation skills inspired by the pedagogy of Matt Turner. In mid-February I presented the ensemble with this poem by the mystic Mawlana Jalal-al-Din Rumi:

Oh soul,
you worry too much.
You have seen your own strength.
You have seen your own beauty.
You have seen your golden wings.
Of anything less,
why do you worry?
You are in truth
the soul, of the soul, of the soul.

In the past few rehearsals we have explored the words, meanings, and images within this poem and have developed some ideas regarding a musical structure. What you will hear tonight is one of nearly-infinite possibilities.

Masterpiece

British composer Paul Drayton wrote this brilliant tongue-in-cheek work for the King’s Singers, a six-voice ensemble whose exceptional musicianship is rivaled only by their wit and charm. In the conservatory we are responsible for training future professional music educators and performers. Hence we teach them the ‘great monuments’ of the classical tradition, and we teach them the modes of critical inquiry that question such ‘pedestalization’ of canon composers. Here we can say we have had our cake and eaten it, too! Our singers researched each of these parodies, learning first about the composer and his style and musical language before discussing why this particular musical joke is so funny. And, true to form, the Bach took forever to learn.
Quant j’ai ouy le tabourin

In the opening of Quant j’ai ouy le tambourin the choir simulates the sounds of sunrise and the thoughts of a young woman as she desires to return to a deep sleep. Later, the sounds of mourning doves are heard as the other voices portray the conflict in the mind of the sleeper: "Shall I remain complacent and continue to rest?" or "Shall I rise and participate in the Mayday activities?" The rhythmic tambourine incites the other young men and women to a day full of fun and frolic, but the young woman decides not to give in to the power of the tambourine, and she drifts back into a deep sleep as the opening music is heard again.

When I heard the tambourine
Sound, calling people to go a-maying.
I made no movement in my bed
Nor even lifted my head from the pillow.
Saying: it’s too early,
I’ll go back to sleep for a little while.

Let the young people share their spoils:
I shall become acquainted with Indifference
And share myself with him;
I have found him to be my closest neighbor.

Salve Regina

Hail, O Queen, Mother of mercy;
Our life, our sweetness, and our hope: hail!

To thee we cry, poor banished children of Eve.
To thee we send up our sighs,
Groaning and weeping in this valley of tears.

Hasten therefore, our Advocate,
And turn your merciful eyes toward us.

And show us Jesus, the blessed fruit
Of your womb, after this exile.

O merciful, O pious,
O sweet Virgin Mary.
Laudi alla Vergine Maria

Best known for his operas, Verdi was also a composer of sacred repertoire, most notably his Requiem. This particular text comes from Dante’s Paradiso. In our rehearsal discussions we observed the multitude of different musical ideas that present themselves here, prompting the timeless question: is the music serving the text or the text the music?

Virgin mother, daughter of your Son, humbled, and exalted, more than any other creature,
fixed goal of the Eternal Wisdom;
are She who made human nature
so noble, that its own Maker did not scorn to become of its making.
The Love, beneath whose warmth
this flower has grown, in eternal peace, flamed again in your womb.
Here you are the noonday torch of Love to us,
and down there, among mortal beings,
you are a living spring of hope.
Lady you are so great, and of such value,
that if any who wishes for grace fails to resort to you,
his longing tries to fly without wings.
Your kindness not only helps those who ask it, it often freely anticipates the request.
In you is tenderness: in you is pity:
in you is generosity: in you whatever excellences exist in the creature, combined together.

Ave Maria

This setting by Franz Biebl was sung far and wide in the late 1990s after being made famous by the men’s vocal ensemble Chanticleer. Set in double-choir format, the singers are challenged to make a cohesive sound within one ensemble and then join that with the sound of the other ensemble for moments of heightened beauty.

Hail Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee.
Blessed art thou among women,
and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.
Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners,
now and in the hour of our death. Amen.

O Radix Jesse
O Root of Jesse,
Who art placed for a sign of the people,
Before whom kings shall shut their mouths,
Whom the Gentiles shall supplicate:
Come Thou to deliver us,
Do not tarry.

Agnus Dei
Born the youngest of ten children to a Reformed Church minister, Frank Martin showed early promise in math before turning his attention to professional music. Martin led, in effect, two lives: one as a prominent instrumental composer, pianist, and teacher; and the other as a man of profound spirituality who longed to live in a simpler, more devout world in which the composer could be an anonymous voice in the worship service. In this spirit, the 31 year-old Martin composed most of this Mass, after which he hid the work in his desk, fearful that it would become (as it indeed has) “the Martin Mass” instead of music for worship. He finished the Agnus Dei in 1926 after five more years of continued spiritual wrestling.

Triptych
Triptych was originally commissioned for two separate choirs, a year apart from each other. Movement I, called “Threnody” at the time, was commissioned for the inaugural concert of the Choir of London in 2004. O’Regan writes that “Threnody” was “the first composition that evolved entirely from my New York perspective.” Movements II and III, commissioned by Portsmouth Grammar School, were originally titled “And There Was a Great Calm” for lower strings and treble voices and premiered in 2005. The title of second commission derives from Thomas Hardy’s poem of the same name, and is quoted in the soprano solo within Movement III. Hardy’s poem was written in 1918, and was inspired by the signing of the Armistice, which ended World War I. All three movements did not come together as Triptych until 2005. Musically, Triptych is influenced by the music of North Africa, probably Algeria and Morocco, where O’Regan spent a portion of his early childhood.

In its completed form, Triptych contemplates the evolution of the ways humans perceive death. The first movement considers the unrestricted power of death, the second the ways humans memorialize their dearly departed, and the third positively characterizes our own eventual ascent to heavenly enlightenment. O’Regan joins the ranks of Brahms and Britten by choosing a series of texts from a variety of cultures and faiths to depict his personal beliefs. His selection of poetry from each important religion and philosophy highlights universal and timeless ideals that branches dogmatic differences, and highlights the innate unity at the center of different faiths and philosophies.

“Threnody” (Mvt. I), defined as “a song of mourning”, begins with a dramatic declaration about the egalitarian nature of death by the choir, unaccompanied. O’Regan sets this text in collage-style. The chorus declaims the text in cascading, dovetailing lines that conjoin with one another until the full rhetorical statement has been heard. Following this remarkable introduction, O’Regan uses driving rhythms in the strings to propel the music forward. “As We Remember Them” (Mvt. II) is a gorgeous soundscape that inspires quiet introspection. The movement speaks of seeing the reflection of departed loved ones in the beauty and strength of nature. The final poignant lines of Gittelsohn’s poem remind the listener that those who die remain alive in our thoughts and memories. The juxtaposition of solo soprano and chorus mimics the call and response structure of a sacred service, while the underlying string writing is ethereal and transparent. “From Heaven Distilled a Clemency” (Mvt. III), quickly returns to a faster, rock-and-roll tempo with ascending melodies in the choir coupled with syncopated kickdrum figures in the low strings. The orchestra and choir exuberantly proclaim the closing text by Islamic mystic Rumi with confidence “Why then should I be afraid? I shall die once again as an angel blest.”

I. Threnody

When death takes off the mask, [we] will know one another,

Text by William Penn (1644–1718), from Some Fruits of Solitude
In Reflections and Maxims (1682)

Tremblest thou when my face appears
To thee? Wherefore thy dreadful fears?
Be easy, friend; ’tis thy truest gain
To be far away from the sons of men.
I offer a couch to give thee ease:
Shall dreamless slumber so much displease?

Text by Muhammad Rajab Al-Bayoumi (dates unknown), from Death Speaks, translated by Arthur J. Arberry (1950)

To see a World in a Grain of Sand,
And a Heaven in a Wild Flower,
Hold Infinity in the palm of your hand,
And Eternity in an hour.

Text by William Blake (1757–1827), from Auguries of Innocence (1808)

Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for [people] to dwell together in unity.

Text from Psalm 133, from the Bible (King James Version, 1611)

II. As We Remember Them

In the rising of the sun and at its going down, we remember them.
In the blowing of the wind and in the chill of winter,
we remember them.
In the opening buds and in the rebirth of spring,
we remember them.
In the blueness of the sky and in the warmth of summer,
we remember them.
In the rustling of the leaves and in the beauty of autumn,
we remember them.
When [we’re] weary and in need of strength, we remember them.
When [we’re] lost and sick at heart, we remember them.
So long as we live, they too shall live, for they are part of us,
As we remember them.

Text by Roland B. Gittelsohn (1910–1995), adapted from The Gates of Repentance
And the Heav’nly Quire stood mute,
And silence was in Heav’n.
Text by John Milton (1608–1684), from Paradise Lost, Book III (1667)

III. From Heaven Distilled A Clemency

Each shall arise in the place where their life [spirit] departs.
“Bundahis- Bahman yast”; Indian Bundahishn (ninth century), adapted from Sacred Book of the East, Volume 5, translated by Edward W. West (1860)

[So] Why then should I be afraid? I shall die once again to rise an angel blest.

“Masnavi i ma’navi”; Mathwani of Jalalu’d’Din Rumi (13th century), adapted from Masnavi i Ma’navi, Book III, translated by Edward H. Whinfield (1898)

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The Soul that rises with us, our life’s Star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting. And cometh from afar.
Text by William Wordsworth (1770–1850),
from Ode: Intimations of Immortality (1807)

Calm fell. From heaven distilled a clemency; There was peace on earth, and silence in the sky.

Text by Thomas Hardy (1840–1928), from And There Was a Great Calm on the signing of the Armistice (1918)
