The 1983-84 President’s Report and Honor Roll of Donors

The president focuses on campus facilities
President Richard Warch takes the title of his fifth annual report, "The Silver Dome," from one of Lawrence's most popular school songs, O'er the Fox: "O'er the Fox the pale moon shimmered, Beauty bathed the silver dome; And the elms on the campus murmured softly, Lawrence is our dear Old Home." What these phrases suggest to President Warch is that "Lawrence is not only a liberal arts institution with an educational mission, faculty, students, and alumni"—elements of the college that he has addressed in previous annual reports. "Lawrence is a setting as well," with essential buildings, facilities, and apparatus. These aspects of Lawrence today form the theme of his 1983-84 report.

Our cover photograph is of Main Hall's silver dome. An astute observer will notice that something is not quite right with the picture, however. The flag pole that has topped the dome for as many years as one can remember is missing. In July, lightning struck and shattered the university's computer center and radio station. Since our photograph was taken, the cupola has been lowered from atop Main Hall for repair; it will be back in place by mid-September.

THE PRESIDENT’S REPORT

“THE SILVER DOME”

By Richard Warch

WHATEVER their musical liabilities—and members of the conservatory are not the only ones who can cite them—Lawrence songs embrace recollections, images, and a sense of place that derive from a felt experience of the college and its campus. Sentimental though they be, these songs remind us of the abiding importance of Lawrence as place as well as institution. The Alma Mater—split infinitive and all—speaks of “the well-known river” and the (now significantly pruned) “vine-clad walls,” and O'er the Fox invokes “the silver dome” and the (now nearly gone) “elms on the campus.”

What these phrases suggest is that Lawrence is not only a liberal arts institution with an educational mission, faculty, students, and alumni—elements of the college that I have addressed in annual reports since 1980. Lawrence is a setting as well. Its campus, its buildings, its facilities, and its apparatus are essential elements of the college, and these aspects of Lawrence today form the theme of my fifth President’s Report.

President James A. Garfield, speaking to Williams alumni in 1871, said: “Give me a log hut, with only a simple bench, Mark Hopkins on one end and I on the other, and you may have all the buildings, apparatus and libraries without him.” Garfield’s remark is a right testimony to the central role of the faculty, indeed of the individual teacher, in making a college like ours special. Speaking with a Lawrence alumna this past June, in fact, I heard a similar contention when she told me that what made the college meaningful to her, and what would keep it strong for future generations, were its teachers, not its facilities.

That is indisputably so, and nothing that follows should be construed as contrary to that assertion. At the same time, it is important to note that liberal education has moved far beyond the uncomplicated world evoked in Garfield’s praise of Hopkins. Not only have simple benches been replaced by contoured chairs, but no teacher at Lawrence today would be able to further the mission of the college without buildings, apparatus, and libraries. These things are not only indispensable to first-rate teaching and learning in the arts and sciences, they are absolutely central to the character and style of the residential college.

For Lawrence, this aspect of the college was captured and conveyed marvelously in Marguerite Schumann’s (L ’44) Creation of a Campus (published in 1957). She covered the story from the building of Main Hall in 1854 to the completion of Colman Hall in the 1956-57 year; since then, Lawrence has added nine more buildings (replacing three in the process).

This year, thirteen decades after Main Hall was dedicated, Lawrence has begun construction on another new facility, a main campus recreation center designed to serve the individual and intramural recreational interests of the college community. When it is completed, the campus will consist of eighteen major buildings, plus the Quad, and several annexes and small houses. Together, they provide Lawrence students with the setting and the context for their living and learning.

We have come a long way from the years when Main Hall served all the needs of the college: residence hall, classrooms, chapel, and library. Indeed, as early as the last quarter of the last century, someone complained that “nothing has been done to relieve that solitary stone pile of its dreary loneliness.” Main’s Hall’s singularity, however, was not the only impetus for campus expansion.
President Huntley, in good clerical fashion, argued for the creation of another facility in these titilating terms: “Give us a Ladies’ Building,” he exhorted, “and you will hear no more about the lawlessness at Lawrence.” It was not until the tenure of President Raymond that this correlation was tested when D.G. Ormsby donated funds for the residence hall that now bears his name. The record does not reveal if tranquility reigned as a consequence.

The more salient point here, however, is that the motivation for another college building was not some abstract edifice complex but a recognition of a clear need for a facility that would better serve the college’s purposes and interests. And that motivation has informed the building of the campus up to the present day. In the nearly 100 years since the completion of Ormsby, the growth of the campus has been dramatic, though not excessive. Indeed, one of Lawrence’s assets today is that the campus is not overbuilt and that it is, on the whole, well suited to the nature and style of the institution.

“One of Lawrence’s assets today is that the campus is not overbuilt and that it is, on the whole, well suited to the nature and style of the institution.”

As Marguerite Schumann argued—and as anyone who knows Lawrence will confirm—during his tenure, Samuel Plantz oversaw the most significant expansion of the college. As she wrote, “It was his 30 years in the president’s chair that gave Lawrence College its campus and its self-respect.” It is probably safe to say that the latter was in some ways a function of the former. Although not all of the buildings erected during his presidency are extant today—the first Alexander Gymnasium, Carnegie Library, and Peabody Conservatory are all gone—Plantz can be credited with the construction of four that remain: Stephenson Hall of Science, Brokaw Hall, Sage Hall, and the Memorial Chapel. All told, he was responsible for seven major additions to the campus.

President Wriston, to whom belongs the credit for shaping and articulating the liberal education values that most inform Lawrence today, also provided one major and remarkably durable addition to the campus, the second and still serviceable Alexander Gymnasium (1929). The next twenty-five years were not ones of exceptional campus growth; the fraternity quadrangle—a dream of Wriston’s realized by Barrows—and the Worcester Art Center and Memorial Union, built during the Pusey years, were the only additions.

After Plantz, Presidents Knight and Tarr (whose combined terms of office were half of Plantz’s) created much of the campus of today: from 1954 to 1969, nine new buildings were added, ranging in scope from the Landis-Peabody Center (which now houses health services on one end and alumni affairs and development on the other) to Youngchild Hall of Science (home of the computer center, biology, chemistry, and physics). This was also the period which brought Lawrence its Music-Drama Center, providing a home suitable to the growing prominence of these fine arts in the life of the college. In the main, however, the new construction in these years was prompted and made possible by the merger with Milwaukee-Downer College. Most new facilities addressed the needs of a residential campus, with three new residence halls (Plantz, Trever, and Kohler) and a commons (Downer) added to the complex. One result of these additions—beginning with the erection of Colman in 1956—was the elimination of the renowned (or infamous) quonset huts as places of human habitation.

Since the completion of Downer Commons in 1968, one more structure has been added to the campus. During the tenure of Thomas Smith, Lawrence built a magnificent new library, and the claim that it stands today as one of the finest small-college facilities in the land is not overstated.

In the middle of the last century, Carlyle wrote that “the true university of these days is a collection of books.” A version of that claim has always been embraced at Lawrence, and over the years the college has erected facilities to accommodate its growing collections: the Carnegie Library of 1906 (which was demolished in 1974 to make room for the new library); the Samuel Appleton Library of 1964 (which presently stands as a wing of the new building); and the Seeley G. Mudd Library of 1975.

These facilities, quite simply, enable Lawrence to aspire to that level of excellence and achievement that we all desire for it. Without them, the teaching and learning and residential living that characterize the college enterprise simply could not be conducted: adequate and varied lecture and seminar rooms; well-equipped laboratories, computer facilities, and studios; respectable and responsible holdings of books, periodicals, recordings, and documents; a full and representative teaching collection of slides and art works; ample and serviceable public spaces; and hospitable and attractive living accommodations are all essential to our mission. Thus, while we retain a philosophical attachment to Garfield’s paean, we know that the college’s present standing and stature depend in no small measure on these buildings and the facilities, equipment, and collections they house.
To maintain that status and stature, the college must be constant in its quest—and must occasionally be prepared to accelerate that quest—to provide resources adequate to its purposes. Modern science depends on up-to-date equipment; music education requires proper instruments; and all disciplines need to keep current with the literature of the field. These items are the price of excellence.

"Lawrence's facilities, quite simply, enable it to aspire to that level of excellence and achievement that we all desire for it. Without them, the teaching and learning and residential living that characterize the college enterprise simply could not be conducted."

In addition to these attributes, there is a second category of possessions which contributes in different and often dramatic ways to the traditions, ambience, and educational mission of the college. They help Lawrence achieve that margin of excellence that distinguishes the substance and style of what we are and do from other institutions and which give the college its special character. The list here is impressive, and would include such items as: the Teakwood Room and other objects, furnishings, and artifacts from Milwaukee-Downer (grandfather clocks, the sundial, and various memorabilia) which provide an elegance and charm to the spaces they grace; the electron microscope, a research tool rarely encountered by undergraduates of other institutions, which gives science education at Lawrence a front-running edge; the Pohl collection of German expressionist art, an intelligently collected and remarkable assemblage of major works bequeathed to Lawrence in 1983; the holdings of the anthropology department, particularly the recently donated oceanic collection (reviewed in the Spring issue of Lawrence Today) and an array of native American artifacts; the rare book collection, with treasures ranging from an early 16th-century Erasmus commentary and a first-rate example of fore-edge painting, each given to the college within the past few years, to a fine collection of the first serial edition of the works of Dickens; and the holdings of Roman and Greek artifacts which enliven the curriculum in classics. On one scale of measurement, these items and objects may be considered luxuries. On the scale of values appropriate to Lawrence, they add a dimension of richness and depth to the campus environment that makes them almost necessary.

Undoubtedly the most magnificent illustration of this kind of precious resource is Björklunden, the 325-acre estate given to Lawrence by Donald and Winifred Boynton. Its lodge and studio, and particularly the handcrafted chapel, are marvelous creations and provide Lawrence with not only an asset but a trust. The Björklunden Seminar Program, now in its fourth year, is enhanced and enlivened by the nature of the setting, one which is itself instructive and uplifting.

Though in different and perhaps less self-evident ways, the same may be said for the campus. At least Wriston said so. In The Nature of a Liberal College he argued that "if the emotions are to be educated along with the mind, environment must play a significant part. . . . That being so, we must pay attention to how students live. The college home is educational, or it is not. . . . Students must be housed in buildings and with furniture which contribute to their education. . . . Students should be surrounded with works of artistic merit; the landscaping of the campus should not be neglected." That argument remains valid today and it explains why the college pays heed to its appearance. It explains why we have long-term plans for sprucing up residence hall lounges, for selecting wall-hangings for Riverview Lounge, and for adding plantings to the campus.

Joan Didion's crisp claim that "style is character" has its analogue at Lawrence: to create and maintain a campus style in harmony with the college's character. Since that character embodies academic excellence and the conviction that liberal education in a residential setting involves a total experience, not one confined exclusively to the classroom, then Lawrence's style—the look and bearing of the campus, the care and imagination involved in its upkeep, the search for appropriate additions and improvements—must be complementary and supportive.

To neglect these aspects of the college is to sell our birthright on the one hand and to place an enormous burden on future generations on the other.

In fact, that sale and burden are ones that American higher education has been making and placing with increasing frequency in the past few decades. A recent study entitled Crumbling Academe estimates the "total cost of needed repairs or replacement on American campuses at $40 billion to $50 billion." Tight budgets and old facilities may be the two culprits here, but for American colleges and universities, the piper will have to be paid. The author of this study makes a simple but telling point: "If we allow the facilities to crumble," he writes, "the institutions will have difficulty sustaining their mission."

This report highlights one of the most important challenges facing Lawrence: to maintain, indeed to enhance, its campus facilities. Put somewhat flippantly, it might be noted that the Main Hall dome does not re-silver itself. Nor do library books replace themselves. Planos are not self-tuning. Test-tubes break. Grass grows. Roofs leak. And new needs and opportunities emerge.

On the whole, Lawrence has performed responsibly in meeting these needs and obligations. We fund repair and replacement reserves for a full range of campus facilities; we strive to budget adequately for annual library and equipment acquisitions; and we seek to accommodate the need for campus improvements both on a regular basis and through special projects, such as the renovation of Main Hall, undertaken and completed in 1979. As for the campus itself, the testimony of returning alumni seems to confirm that it has never looked better. And with the planting of a memorial garden this fall, its appearance will be even more attractive.

"No teacher at Lawrence would be able to further the mission of the college with buildings, apparatus, and libraries."

I can write with confidence that Lawrence is responsible for a miniscule fraction of the multi-billion dollar deferred maintenance debt owed by American higher education. But we know where the needs lie and we intend to address them. We shall do so patiently and persistently, knowing that our ambitions will always outstrip our resources. That, of course, has always been the case with Lawrence. Ours is a college created by ambitions expressed and realized over two centuries, and while the realization has rarely been immediate it has always been eventual.

Our heritage and our allegiance to quality remind us that much remains to be accomplished. Replacing and maintaining the college's plant and assets are only the first steps. Improvement and enhancement also require our attention. One of Lawrence's great strengths is its library collection, one that is the product of over a century of careful planning and investment. Extending that record today, however, is a challenging task: The cost of library books and periodical subscriptions have escalated far faster than any conventional index in the past decade.

"Ours is a college created by ambitions expressed and realized over two centuries, and while the realization has rarely been immediate it has always been eventual."

Comparable strengths—and therefore comparable needs—occur in the sciences as well: New technological advances in scientific instrumentation and computing hardware and software occur regularly. On these fronts, we must continue to move ahead.

Buildings, too, call for our attention. Though serviceable, Alexander Gymnasium, Worcester: Art Center, and Brokaw Hall require renovation and reconfiguration. Alexander is in great shape for the shape it's in—to paraphrase my grandmother—but is showing its age in most respects. Worcester contains no gallery space with the security and climate controls that would permit the exhibition of the college's permanent collection of art. And Brokaw, though it had all of its windows and doors replaced over the summer, could stand an interior facelift as well.

As we look to our future in these respects, we do well to look also at our past. The campus today has emerged and evolved over the years. Buildings have been erected, torn down, maintained, and envisioned to meet the needs of a college devoted to excellence in liberal learning. Equipment has been purchased, books acquired, and objects obtained—and these same items replaced or refurbished—to serve the educational aims of the institution. Together, these things enable and support Lawrence today. Together, these things embody, in their own way and in their own fashion, the college as place.

And just as the silver dome of Main Hall has marked and landmarked this place since the middle of the nineteenth century, so shall it perform that task into the twenty-first, reminding us not only of what Lawrence once was but of what it shall and should remain.

President Richard Warch
A PLACE TO TEACH AND LEARN

COMPUTER STUDIES

Buildings, apparatus, and libraries—indispensable to first-rate teaching and learning in the arts and sciences, absolutely central to the character and style of the residential college, indicative of our standing and stature. A closer look at a few of our buildings and the facilities, equipment, and collections they house remind us that much has been accomplished since the years when Main Hall served all the needs of the college. Our heritage and allegiance to quality remind us that much remains to be accomplished as we continue to move Lawrence ahead.

IN THE PAST twenty years, computer facilities at Lawrence have evolved at a dramatic rate—from the original single-user machine in 1964 to the first timesharing system in 1971 and then to a larger system in 1975 and to still more powerful systems in 1979. Today, approximately 50 terminals (including graphics) connect to the large Digital PDP 11/70 system dedicated to student and faculty needs.

Elective courses in computer science are open to all, and each student may have a private computer account. Students with strong interests in computing may take the mathematics-computer science major or supplement a major in another discipline by completing an interdisciplinary area in computer studies. As might be expected, explains Director of Computer Services James Evans, computer use by students grows not merely in a quantitative sense, but also in substance, imagination, and scope of application to academic work.

Moreover, faculty use of the computer throughout the curriculum provides students with a variety of computer experiences. Biology classes use computer programs to drill students in terminology. Chemistry labs control experiments with laboratory computers. Computer graphics help music theory students develop facility in the technique of harmonizing a melody.

"Computer technology may well be the most dynamic aspect of contemporary society," states Tom Naps, Lawrence's educational programmer/analyst. "What is adequate this year runs the risk of being obsolete next year. Students should not be surprised if, by the time they graduate, both the available computer equipment and the curriculum have undergone change. Both must change to keep pace with the times. Indeed, for those of us involved in the computer science program, this dynamic growth is what makes the field so fascinating; one can never stop learning."

Though such items span centuries of technology and represent vastly different cultures and societies, each has its place in the Seeley G. Mudd Library, and each illustrates the wide variety of available resources. Since 1854, when Samuel Appleton provided $10,000 to found the library, Lawrence has been accumulating one of the finest undergraduate library collections in the Midwest. The present collection numbers 255,138 volumes, 1,000 periodical subscriptions, dozens of national and foreign newspapers, and countless microform items. Add these to a rapidly expanding media center, easily accessible computer terminals, and a superb reference collection augmented by membership in the Wisconsin Inter-Library Loan system, and they sum up to a facility capable of meeting the needs of even the most inquiring student.

In addition, Lawrence's library staff is dedicated to acquainting students with the intricacies of library use. New students often begin with a simple "How do I find ______?" question and end, four years later, still marveling at the vast resources housed in the Lawrence library.

Carol Butts, assistant university librarian and director of technical services, regards the Lawrence-Milwaukee-Downer merger in 1964 as an important moment in the growth and diversification of the library. Rare and unique items not usually acquired by Lawrence were among the 35,000 Downer volumes, including a children's literature collection, the Reynolds' Christmas collection, and a genealogical collection from New York State.

While gifts and bequests play an important role in enhancing the library's collection—some of the most distinctive holdings have come to Lawrence through the generosity of donors—the university itself has a constant obligation to build its resources. "All of our collections are living collections," stresses Butts. "We never stop collection-building. It's a continual process; we need to keep current." The resulting strain on the budget is an ever-present factor, but a necessary one. As Butts says, "Our collection is part of the teaching curriculum; a year or two without purchases means those books are probably lost to us forever."
From the beginning, when 19th-century science classes were held in Main Hall and laboratory equipment “consisted of a few bottles, test tubes and Bunsen burners,” (Marguerite Schumann, Creation of a Campus) until today, when Stephenson and Younghild Halls of Science house sophisticated 20th-century instrumentation such as a Cary 14 spectrophotometer, an electron microscope, electrophysiological recording equipment, and laboratory computers, laboratory experimentation has been a hallmark of the science programs at Lawrence.

Beginning students conduct significant research projects of their own choosing with the help and encouragement of their professors. Familiarity with and easy access to laboratory equipment is emphasized from the start.

Advanced students can participate in faculty research programs—an endeavor which often leads to independent honors projects in the senior year and to publication in professional journals of papers co-authored with faculty. In the physics lab, for example, on-going research in time-resolved laser spectroscopy involves the study of various properties of atoms in excited states. According to physics Professor John Brandenberger, these investigations require several types of lasers. Many of these instruments have been designed and constructed at Lawrence with the help of students. Especially vital to research of this sort is the laboratory computing program. Students receive formal instruction in the principles of interfacing small computers with laboratory instruments for the purpose of controlling experiments and gathering and processing data.

“Some of the best things we do here are the independent studies and research by the advanced students,” says Brandenberger. “It is an important part of Lawrence’s mission. Recent studies show that 31 percent of students receiving doctorates in science during the past ten years come from undergraduate programs in liberal arts colleges such as Lawrence. Hence, strong facilities in the sciences play a critical role in the production of future scientists in this country.”

Keeping science facilities strong is a growing concern at Lawrence, as it is throughout the science community. During the post-Sputnik era of the 1960s, generous support from federal agencies such as the National Science Foundation helped Lawrence acquire state-of-the-art scientific equipment. As government funds dwindled, very few colleges and universities, Lawrence among them, have found the means to maintain this level of support.

Coupled with the decline in funding, rising costs and accelerated obsolescence concern Lawrence scientists. “We’re making things work,” says biology Professor Nick Maravolo, “but some of the equipment is so obsolete we can’t get parts for it. Still, we’re in better shape than most undergraduate colleges and universities. We are solving problems and answering questions; we’re just doing it with ten-year-old equipment. The important element is creativity. Instrumentation is necessary, of course, but without creativity students just use instruments. We devise a lot of significant equipment through the dedication, perseverance, and creativity of our students. Sometimes people forget that science is just as creative as poetry.”

Jeff Orlin’s, ’84, senior research project involved measuring the Vitamin E content of the retina with a high performance liquid chromatograph. Jeff’s data will be published as part of a study on the biochemistry of the retina.
A joint effort in 1958 between the university and the community led to the construction of Lawrence's Music-Drama Center. Twenty-five years later both Lawrence and Appleton continue to enjoy the cultural and educational enrichment made possible by that effort.

In conjunction with Memorial Chapel, the performance halls, rehearsal spaces, classrooms, and studios of the Music-Drama Center provide both Conservatory of Music and college students with the diverse settings needed for music education and performance. These spaces, along with the wide array of instruments they contain, have made it possible for conservatory students to compile an impressive record: 30 percent of recent graduates enrolled immediately in the best graduate and music schools, nearly 30 percent began teaching in public schools, and more than 15 percent entered business-related fields (a tribute to the liberal arts dimension of the conservatory's curriculum). In the view of Dean of the Conservatory Colin Murdoch, "The facilities we have are great; they enable an outstanding faculty to sustain a program of excellence commensurate with our traditions and our aspirations."

The center is also home to the Department of Theatre and Drama. Two major performing spaces—the A.P. Stansbury and Theodore F. Cloak theatres—are used both for teaching and for university productions. With three mainstage performances, an opera, and numerous student productions each year, the center affords the community a full menu of theatrical events. "Fortunately," says Fred Gaines, associate professor of theatre and drama, "Lawrence is blessed with spaces that enable us to mount a wide variety of productions. Our primary goal is to improve present facilities, rather than to enlarge them."

In keeping with its mission to serve not only the university, but the broader community as well, the Music-Drama center hosts eminent artists—such as Charles Treger—and major touring companies—such as a group from the Royal Shakespeare Company. In addition, the preparatory program in music serves 350 children and adults from the Fox Valley, and the venerable Attic Community Theatre stages performances in Stansbury and Cloak each summer.

Given the illustrious traditions and present vigor of the performing arts at Lawrence, both as curricular programs and as public events, this facility teems with activity. Indeed, the demands for space sometimes exceed its availability, and it is not unusual to find a trumpeter practicing in the courtyard or—as was the case last spring—two flutists rehearsing a recital on the front steps of the Chapel. Even the theatre department has taken performances to the Memorial Union Coffeehouse.

The most frequently cited building in the university's weekly events calendar, the Music-Drama Center probably accommodates the most traffic of any place besides the Commons. As its use indicates, in spite of constraints of space, the Music-Drama Center—and the Chapel and Jazz Annex as well—continue to provide a setting conducive to artistic ambition and achievement and to enriching experiences for all members of the Lawrence community.
The Lawrence Art Collection, greatly enhanced by the recent acquisition of the LaVera Pohl Collection of German Expressionist Art, is so extensive that Worcester Art Center is nearly bursting its walls. And it takes nearly three pages of single-spaced type to list the university’s anthropological collections, also greatly enhanced by a recent acquisition—the Gevaart-Podzilni collection of primitive New Guinea artifacts.

“The art collection,” as described by Carol Lawton, assistant professor of art history, comprises the “older permanent collection and the Pohl collection.” Many of the items in the permanent collection—the artifacts in the Alice G. Chapman Teakwood Room, for instance—were acquired at the time of the Lawrence-Milwaukee-Downer merger. Housed in the art center and used in the teaching of all art courses, the permanent collection consists of more than 1,000 objects, mainly prints, from all periods and countries. These works have been exhibited in the past, but students and visitors “see only the tip of the iceberg,” according to Lawton, who serves as curator while the search for a curator/modern art history instructor continues, “Frankly, we need more space and we need a curator to catalog the old collection.”

The other half of the collection, the Pohl bequest, includes prints, paintings, and watercolors, most of which represent the German Expressionist movement. The lack of display space, however, has curtailed use of the collection. “This collection came out of the blue,” says Lawton; “it’s a terrific asset. There’s enough material in the German works alone for original student honors projects for several years.”

The anthropology collection is also of immense value to the students. “It is a very important study collection,” explains Professor of Anthropology Ronald Mason, “both for on-going archeological research and for use in teaching. It is one thing for students to read about various periods and artifacts, but quite another to actually handle these specimens.”

The specimens—ranging in size from a 6’x8’ tapa cloth from Samoa to a 1mm diameter trade bead from Rock Island, Wisconsin, and in age from North American Indian artifacts of the early 20th century to African and European Lower Paleolithic items that go back 500,000 years—are found in extensive holdings of archeological and ethnographic materials, as well as in smaller collections of osteological remains.

“Included are some really superb museum-quality specimens,” says Mason, “items that would be welcome in any museum in the world. Unfortunately, most of these materials are in storage, so very few people have any idea of their scope and value.”

Mason would like to see a museum or exhibition facility on the Lawrence campus “so we can make these anthropology collections available to a larger audience.” Lawton shares this vision and sees the need for a gallery complex at Lawrence. “The college’s art holdings are impressive,” she states, “and deserve prominence and accessibility.”
KEEPERS OF THE DOME

On this particular Friday afternoon, Don Stuyvenberg, John Moder, Harold Ginke, Herb Hill, Carl Krueger, and Jim Verstegen are surprisingly in one place—the department's offices in back of the science buildings.

Carl Krueger, lead plumber and pipefitter, has just come from the Phi Delta Theta house; a shower was in need of repair. Krueger is considered one of the department's "old-timers"; he has been with the college for 29 years.

Herb Hill, assistant director of physical plant for energy, is on his way out the door. One of his crews is cleaning the heat exchanger in the Music-Drama Center and, at day's end, he wants to check on its progress.

Jim Verstegen, another department veteran—he's been with Lawrence for 35 years—is in the lock shop. A carpenter foreman and locksmith, Verstegen is working on one of the hundreds of door locks which secure the campus.

Harold Ginke, never without his cap, is in the greenhouse, just across the alley from his office. The assistant director of physical plant for grounds and security is inspecting seedlings destined for campus plantings.

The phone is ringing in John Moder's office. The assistant director of physical plant for housekeeping, custodial work, carpentry, plumbing, and the university's 52 rental properties is arranging for the repair of Main Hall's damaged flag pole.

Don Stuyvenberg, director of physical plant and 36-year department veteran, is hunched over the drafting table in his office studying the plans for the university's new recreation center.

"Building, apparatus, and libraries are not only indispensable to first-rate teaching and learning, they are absolutely central to the character and style of the residential college," President Warch has said. So, too, are the keepers of the buildings, apparatus, and libraries—the keepers of the Dome.
THE 1983-84 FINANCIAL STATEMENT

THE THREE PRINCIPAL financial statements* of the university for the 1983-84 fiscal year appear on the following pages. They reveal several important aspects of Lawrence's fiscal condition. First, the combined funds of the university declined $902,822 during the past year, caused primarily by the diminished market value of the endowment. Although offset in part by some net additions to the endowment corpus, the change in market value resulted in a 6.9 percent decline in the endowment last year. Due in large measure to the substantial increase in endowment value in the prior year (the endowment increased by 48.5 percent in 1982-83 and combined funds increased by $13,789,914), Lawrence weathered last year's down market relatively well.

Secondly, it should be noted that exclusive of the change in the endowment fund, the net fund balances of the university increased $1,724,676 last year (compared to a $1,288,131 increase in 1982-83). As a consequence, Lawrence finished the fiscal year in a strong financial posture. Reserve accounts for commitments and contingencies were increased from $253,817 to $796,031. Furthermore, the cumulated unrestricted contingency fund, which Lawrence has been building since 1981-82, now stands at $292,071 or approximately two percent of the current year's expenditures.

Finally, the $418,337 increase in current funds—as shown on the "Statement of Current Fund Revenues, Expenditures and Other Changes"—consists of an increase in unrestricted funds at year-end of $187,309 and a net increase in restricted funds at year-end of $231,028.

Lawrence Current Fund Expenditures
(Excluding Auxiliary Enterprises)
$12,638,451

- Instruction $4,634,543 (37%)
- Student Aid $1,781,715 (14%)
- Operation and Maintenance of Plant $1,514,848 (12%)
- Student Services $656,096 (5%)
- Institutional Support $2,770,212 (22%)
- Academic Support $735,751 (6%)
- Debt Services $116,685 (1%)
- Research $169,122 (1%)
- Surplus $259,479 (2%)

Lawrence Current Fund Revenues
(Excluding Auxiliary Enterprises and Transfers Out)
$12,638,451

- Tuition and Fees $7,606,827 (60%)
- Gifts and Grants $1,369,919 (11%)
- Government Grants $451,272 (3%)
- Endowment Income $2,747,685 (22%)
- Other Sources $462,748 (4%)

Strong support from all of Lawrence's constituencies combined to make another banner year for the college's funds development program. New records were set for the amounts contributed by alumni, by parents, and by friends. Altogether members of these groups contributed $2.7 million, up almost 60 percent from 1983-84.

Similar upward movement was evident in the number of donors from those constituencies, which totaled over 7100. Over 90 percent of those donors designated part or all of their support for the Lawrence Fund, the college's most important source of gift income for current operations. The number of alumni donors—at 6404—set a new record for the fourth year in a row. And the number of parent donors jumped 30 percent to 572, also a record. Alumni participation, at 40 percent, set a new record as well.

Although overall support from corporations and foundations did not match 1982-83's strong performance, the college's annual business and industry campaigns in the Fox Cities, Green Bay, Oshkosh, and Milwaukee were again successful. Those programs, conducted by a dedicated and energetic corps of alumni and other volunteers, raised $250,000 in gifts for the operating budget against a goal of $240,000. Support from corporate matching gift programs also increased in 1983-84. Nearly $2.5 million was committed to the college in the form of future interests in charitable remainder and charitable lead trusts. Gifts for endowment totaled $1.42 million and provided for the establishment of 15 new endowment funds.

Altogether, private support amounted to $4.7 million, 20 percent above the 1982-83 record.

The Lawrence of today, and the Lawrence of tomorrow, depend explicitly and substantially on the kind of voluntary support represented by this response to the 1983-84 development campaigns. Without such generosity on the part of its friends, the college would be a very different place—less rewarding for its students, less satisfying for its faculty, less inspiring for its alumni and other friends. Heartfelt thanks to all whose support has made this success possible.

THE FOUNDERS CLUB

The Founders Club was established in 1972 in order to recognize those alumni, parents and friends whose strong commitment to Lawrence's mission and generous contributions to its programs places them in the first rank of its supporters. By their leadership in giving and their interest in the welfare of Lawrence today, members of The Founders Club have continued and sustained the philanthropic example provided by Amos A. Lawrence and Joson Downey, contributing at least $10,000 (payable in annual installments of $1,000 or more) to Lawrence.

Beginning in 1984-85, two additional levels of Founders Club membership will be recognized: Those contributing $2,000 a year for a minimum of 10 years will be designated Silver Seal members and those contributing $5,000 a year for a minimum of 10 years will be designated Gold Seal members.

Lawrence Donors:

Almost 5,500 Lawrence alumni donors helped to make 1983-84 the most successful year to date for the Lawrence University Alumni Fund. The final dollar total of $1,250,329 set another record in alumni giving for the university as well.

As national co-chairman of the Alumni Fund, I especially want to thank you for your continuing strong interest in and commitment to the university. Much credit for this year’s accomplishments belongs to the fine volunteer leadership of our class agents. I know you share my appreciation for their efforts.

The increasing level of alumni support in dollars and donors provides the financial backbone for Lawrence and helps to guarantee the future success of our alma mater. I am confident that I can count on your loyalty again next year to help us meet our goals and set new records. I am looking forward to being in touch with you as we work together for Lawrence.

Robert J. Schaupp, ’51
National Co-Chairman
Lawrence University Alumni Fund
LAWRENCE DONORS

The listing and number of donors, participation percents, and totals are for the 12-month fiscal year beginning July 1, 1983 and ending June 30, 1984.

\textbf{Is your listing correct?}
This report of gifts made to Lawrence University has been carefully checked for errors. It is inevitable, however, that the names of some contributors have been unintentionally omitted or, perhaps, misspelled. If your name is misspelled or otherwise incorrectly listed, please advise the Alumni Office or the Development Office, Lawrence University, P.O. Box 599, Appleton, WI 54912.
MILWAUKEE-DOWNER DONORS

The listing and number of donors, participation percents, and totals are for the 12-month fiscal year beginning July 1, 1983 and ending June 30, 1984.

Milwaukee-Downer Donors:

Congratulations! Forty-one percent of Downer alumnae contributed to Milwaukee-Downer at Lawrence last year—a new record for us—and one that even surpassed the response of Lawrence alumni for the 1983-84 fiscal period. The total dollar amount of $128,066 is a 72 percent increase over last year’s total—another record for our alumnae.

The Downer spirit clearly lives on, and as national co-chairman of the Alumni Fund I want to extend my heartfelt thanks to you for your generous support of Milwaukee-Downer at Lawrence. I know you join me in expressing appreciation for the good work of our class agents. Your continuing strong interest in our college and the new records you have set are highlights of my first year as national co-chairman of the Alumni Fund. The importance of alumnae support grows each year. I am looking forward to being in touch with you again in the months ahead as I continue this role. With your enthusiasm and generous spirit, we will surely meet the challenges that the new year will bring.

Phyllis Weikart Greene, M-D '47
National Co-Chairman
Lawrence University Alumni Fund

THE HIGHLIGHTS OF 1983-84

July 1983
- More than 250 high school students and 40 teachers from Wisconsin attend the first of two sessions of Business World on the Lawrence campus to learn how businesses operate. Co-sponsored by Lawrence, the Wisconsin Department of Public Instruction, and the Wisconsin Association of Manufacturers and Commerce, Business World also brings corporate executives to campus as speakers and as advisers to student-run companies.
- The Research Corporation awards a $15,000 grant to Michael J. LaMarca, the Raymond H. Herzog Professor of Science. The grant will fund an investigation into the biochemistry of material released by egg cells when they are fertilized.

August 1983
- President Warch announces the creation of the new post of dean of admission and the appointment of Steven T. Syverson to the position. Syverson was director of admissions at Pomona College, Claremont, Calif.
- Lawrence is host to a Supervisory Skills Seminar for experienced supervisors in both the private and public sectors. The seminar is co-sponsored by Lawrence and by Deere & Co., farm equipment and construction machinery manufacturers. Curtis W. Tarr, president of Lawrence from 1953 to 1969 and a vice president of Deere & Co., attends the seminar’s concluding event.
- Patty Schultz, a composition major in the Conservatory of Music, is named co-recipient of the Duke Ellington Composition Scholarship at the Eastman Summer Arrangers Institute in Rochester, N.Y. Her competitors were jazz writers representing five countries.

September 1983
- Two Lawrence faculty members and a Lawrence graduate figure prominently in the 39th International Competition for Music Performers in Geneva, Switzerland. Steven Jordheim, instructor of music, wins top prize in the saxophone competition over 79 other saxophonists from five countries. His piano accompanist, Professor of Music Theodore Rehl, is awarded a letter of commendation for outstanding accompanying. And William Sharp, a 1973 graduate, reaches the finals in the vocal competition. For winning, Jordheim is invited to perform as soloist in two concerts in Switzerland and one in France.
- The football Vikings win the 400th game in the school’s history. They beat Concordia College, Milwaukee, 33-27. The Vikings go on to finish 7-2 for the year, their tenth consecutive winning season.

October 1983
- Lawrence D. Longley, associate professor of government, participates in a program in Philadelphia that will be in the 13-part television series “The Constitution—That Delicate Balance.” Longley is on a panel that deals with presidential selection, election, and disability. Other panelists include retired Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart, former senator and secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie, former Solicitor General and special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox, U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (R, Utah), and Jody Powell, press secretary to President Carter. Longley was asked to be on the panel because of his extensive knowledge of the Electoral College.
- Fox Valley concertgoers get a rare opportunity to see professional ballet when the Joffrey Ballet Concert Group, eight dancers from the famed Joffrey Ballet Center in New York City, present dance concerts in Memorial Chapel during Parents’ Weekend.
November 1983

- Judith Jarvis Thomson, professor of philosophy at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, speaks on the subject “On Some Ways of Causing Death” at a university convocation. She discusses moral issues involved in various ways of causing death.

- A performance by the Lawrence University Jazz Ensemble and guest artist trombonist Slide Hampton highlights the third annual “Jazz Celebration” festival. Unique in its non-competitive format, the “Jazz Celebration” festival allows high school jazz musicians to perform for each other, and to participate in or observe jam sessions, an improvisation workshop, and masterclasses with visiting professional musicians.

- Led by sophomore Eric Griffin’s second-place finish, the Vikings capture five of the top nine places to easily win the Midwest Conference cross country championships. It is Lawrence’s first cross country title since 1957.

December 1983

- “Christmas with the Lawrence Choir” is presented to a sold-out audience at the Lawrence Memorial Chapel. In addition to Christmas choral music of the past five centuries, the program includes brass music performed by the Lawrence University Brass Ensemble, harp music by Elizabeth Borsodi, specialist in music, and a candlelight procession. Assistant Professor of Music William Hienz, Jr., directs the program.

January 1984

- Armadillo Ingens Spectat Te, Triviaspeak for “Big Armadillo is watching you,” is the slogan of the 19th Annual Midwest Trivia Contest. John Landis, ‘84, Trivia Grandmaster, publicizes what is believed to be the oldest and longest-running trivia competition in the country during a guest appearance on “Good Morning, America.”

- Five actors from the Royal Shakespeare Company of London open an American tour with a week in residence on the Lawrence campus. The actors present workshops, give several programs and recitals, and cap off the week with a performance of Shakespeare’s “Twelfth Night,” specially adapted for five actors. The actors-in-residence are Ethel M. Barber Visiting Artists.

- Lawrence receives a $250,000 grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation of New York City. President Warch says the money will be used to develop fresh combinations in teaching and learning in Lawrence’s academic program.

February 1984

- Abraham H. Raskin, senior consultant to the National News Council, author, and former labor columnist for The New York Times, speaks at a university convocation on the question “Organized Labor: Cooperation, Collision, or Collapse?”

- Two Lawrence seniors are selected to participate in the Fifteenth Annual Student Symposium sponsored by the Center for the Study of the Presidency. Mary Eggen and William Burrington travel to Washington, D.C., to convene with students from colleges and universities across the country and to discuss “Campaign ’84: The Contest for National Leadership.”

- “A Dream Deferred,” a collection of poetry, song, dance, and oratory celebrating the Black experience and sponsored by the Black Organization of Students, is the finale of Black History Month activities at Lawrence.

- Kimberly-Clark Foundation announces the establishment of a scholarship endowment at Lawrence with contributions that will total $1 million over a five-year period. Darwin E. Smith, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Kimberly-Clark Corporation, says the purpose is to promote both local and national opportunities for students of special promise to pursue their education at Lawrence.
A gift of $250,000 to Lawrence from the estate of Edwin Sweetman is used to establish a scholarship fund in memory of his wife, Clare Scherf Sweetman, M.D. '17. Income from the gift will be used to aid top-ranking Green Bay (Wis.) high school students to attend Lawrence.

March 1984

- The seventy-fifth Artist Series season at Lawrence is celebrated with a performance by the Vienna Octet. Subscribers to the series join the Octet for an on-stage reception following the performance.
- The Thomas J. Watson Foundation announces that three seniors at Lawrence will be awarded $10,000 grants for study and travel abroad. The fellowship winners are Carol Arnosti, Milwaukee; Peter Dulak, Edgar, Wis.; and Laurie Hovell, Galesville, Wis. For the second year in a row, Lawrence is the only college or university in Wisconsin with Watson Fellowship winners, and it is one of only six in the country with more than two winners. Trinity, Colorado, Amherst, St. John’s, and Bowdoin also have three winners. Arnosti and Hovell also receive Fulbright Grants for travel and study abroad.
- Combining a 3.8 grade point average in chemistry with a nationally-ranked rebound average, Carol Arnosti, ’84, receives first-team academic all-America basketball honors for the second consecutive year. She ends her four-year career as the school’s no. 2 all-time rebounder and no. 4 all-time scorer.

April 1984

- Peter von der Heydt, partner in a private banking firm and former Christian Democratic member of the West German Bundestag, visits the campus as a Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellow. Von der Heydt’s visit, made possible by a grant from The German Marshall Fund, is part of a major effort to correct the misconceptions that young Germans and Americans hold about each other’s societies.
- Robert Coles, research psychiatrist, Harvard University Health Services, professor of psychiatry and medical humanities, Harvard University Medical School, and Pulitzer Prize winner, speaks to the campus community on “The Moral Life of Children” at a university convocation.

May 1984

- The tenth Celebrate!, Lawrence’s annual spring festival and gift to the community, is held on Mother’s Day. Student organizers line up more than a dozen bands and ensembles, mimes, rides, clowns, and many other forms of entertainment.
- Laurie Hovell, ’84, wins the Associated Colleges of the Midwest’s Nick Adams Short Story Prize. The award is presented to the one student from the 13 ACM schools who submits a short story best exemplifying the creative process. Hovell, of Galesville, Wis., is the first Lawrence student to win this competition, now in its 12th year.
- Political commentator and columnist George F. Will delivers an insightful and witty analysis of just what is wrong with the country at a university convocation on May 15. “A View from Washington” is the title of his address.
- The Lawrence jazz program earns national recognition as down beat music magazine awards two of its 17 college prizes to Lawrence musicians. Junior Patricia Schultz receives an award for jazz arrangement and Larry Darling, a former Lawrence student, and Jim Kowald, ’83, receive awards in the studio recording category. Internationally regarded as the highest musical honor granted to a student, the down beat or “deebee” Student Music Awards salute the accomplishments of U.S. and Canadian high school and college musicians. This is the first time in the seven years the awards have been given that a current Lawrence student wins.
Celebrate! '84

The Board of Trustees approve plans to construct a multilevel recreational facility on the north bank of the Fox River. Intended to meet the increased student need for accessible, multipurpose recreational facilities, the center will include a new swimming pool, a jogging track, racquetball courts, a dance studio, weight and exercise rooms, basketball and volleyball courts, and saunas. Situated near the campus's familiar Union Hill, the five-level facility should be ready for use by January 1986.

Marshall B. Hulbert, professor emeritus, delivers the Honors Convocation address. "Credo" is the title of his speech. Ninety students receive awards and prizes at the annual event.

Lawrence University awards degrees to 264 students and honorary degrees to four others in its 135th commencement. President Warch confers honorary degrees to two Lawrence alumni: Nenah Elinor Fry, '55, president of Virginia's all-women Sweet Briar College, and David C. Mullford, '59, assistant secretary of the treasury for international affairs. Natalie Zemon Davis, a professor of history at Princeton University and scholar of early modern French history, also receives a doctorate. William M. Schutte, the Lucia R. Briggs Professor of English, receives the master of arts degree ad eundem upon his retirement after teaching at Lawrence since 1960.

Two members of the Conservatory of Music faculty receive outstanding teaching honors at Lawrence's 135th commencement. President Warch presents the Excellent Teaching Award to Miriam Clapp Duncan, professor of music, and the Young Teacher Award to Ernestine Whitman, assistant professor of music.

More than 1000 alumni, spouses, and children visit the Lawrence campus for the university's annual alumni reunion festivities. Highlighting this year's celebration are events commemorating the 20th anniversary of the Milwaukee-Downer and Lawrence colleges merger. By tradition, Saturday evening's banquet includes presentation of the Lawrence University Alumni Association's Distinguished Achievement and Outstanding Service awards. Honored for achievement are Berenice E. Hess, M-D '32, Raymond H. Herzog, '38, and Dr. Howerde E. Sauberlich, '44. Receiving the Outstanding Service Awards are Elmer A. Otte, '36, and Joan Poppert Jacobs, M-D '53.

Lawrence closes its books on a successful fund-raising year. Gift income from all sources for 1983-84 is $5,203,000. Gifts from private sources amount to $4,700,000, a 20 percent increase above 1982-83. Gifts from living Lawrence and Milwaukee-Downer alumni amount to $1,500,000, a 24 percent increase over 1982-83.
