OBEDIENCE TO LAW

President Collidge, in addressing the governors' conference at Washington a few weeks back, did more than urge upon the governors to enforce the law. He challenged every United States citizen to abide by the statutes. "The complementary duty to enforcement of the law rests with the people themselves."

FRAATI LEAGUE

Several fraternity houses on our own campus were looted last year. With members sleeping on the third floor, wholly removed from the rest of the house, and with members coming in at all hours of the night, fraternity houses are easy prey for burglars. Since they are almost designed for that purpose, the mere idea of a burglar is a menace. Every brother should have the feeling that his house is his castle, and that the rest of the fraternity, both on our own campus and at other institutions, have the same feeling with regard to their houses.

JOKING CHANCES

Persons who wantonly destroy personal property for the fun they derive from it should think beyond the momentary sport to the consequence of the deed before acting. The nailing of Fisher's bizarre advertising campaign to campus trees last week did not only bring forth mirth, a jovial moment. But the deed was not a joke as it appeared to be.

Good will and cooperation can be maintained through the destruction of property. The theatres have always been mighty obliging when approached by campus organizations in behalf of college activities. They will split their receipts by granting performances. Entertainments they have willingly shown slides gratis for a week at a time, advertising such events as the all-college play and May Day festivities.

Yet in return for such courtesy, some thoughtless student or group of students may have played an uncharitable last week-end, jeopardizing the existing spirit of fraternality by quoting: "town and gown." A little forethought of the consequences involved will prevent the law-repercussion of such violations. Let's use a little good, sound judgment, please.

And the Elms on the campus murmur so softly,
Of silver slippers gone from every stair,
And her lips soon started to blur.
And her face was white as the moon.
And her eyes grew wide, as if an unseen spirit had snatched her from the brink of the abyss.

And one by one the patient stars peer through.
And flashed her two-faced glances,
And her lips soon started to blur.
And her face was white as the moon.
And her eyes grew wide, as if an unseen spirit had snatched her from the brink of the abyss.

But the moon is up, and I'm alone again,
And the stars are shining brightly in the sky.
I feel so lonely and so sad,
And I wish I could be with you, my love.

Our home football games are over. Yet that does not mean that the season is over for our fighting team. If they are to stand for the remaining three games which we must stand beside them with all the pep that we've shown during the last few weeks plus a little bit more. Give them a good send off tomorrow morning.

To enforcement of the law is obedience to the law. That rests with the people themselves. "As college students and members of the fraternity, we have a duty to uphold the American ideal of self-government."
New French Student

One of the most interesting students on the Lawrence campus this year is Mademoiselle Yvonne Fourniere, an exchange student from the University of Rennes in Brittany, who excelled in the liberal arts' course this fall. After three years of work at Rennes, Mlle. Fourniere took her degree of B.S., and, successfully passing the examination required for exchange, was admitted to Lawrence to complete her course.

Expressing to a Lawrentian her impressions of American college life as tried on the Lawrence campus, Mlle. Fourniere said, "My general impression is that the French system of education is better than the American system to give one a general knowledge of things, but I know that on this point many disagree with me. I believe the French students work more in school than you Americans. There are no outside activities to distract us and consequently we can pay more attention to our studies."

We Speake the Star

"I was surprised by many of your customs," Mlle. Fourniere continued, "especially that of having both men and women at the same school. In France, they are kept in separate schools. Only during holidays do they see each other."

"What particularly impressed me about American students? Why, I was shocked at first at the way the girls use rouge on their cheeks and lips. And in France girls don't think boys are the most important things, but I know that on this point many disagree with me."

The Story of a Man

The idea of exchange students originated during the recent war when America negotiated with France to exchange college students in order to become more familiar with her customs and to encourage friendly relations. The students are selected by examination.

Robert R. Hanson

Robert R. Hanson, world-wide traveler, instructor in English at Lawrence, narrowly escaped death when he visited a Tibetan (Buddhist) monastery, where five strangers had once gone before. Two huge mastiffs, trained to the ex­ tense, broke their bondage and sprang at him, but he was saved by priests of the place. The complete story of Mr. Hanson's visit to the monastery is in­ terestingly recounted in another column of The Lawrentian.

on that occasion presented an address on his theme of homecoming. A set of bands beneath a low-hanging swaying flag and white tablecloths with streamers, he emphasized on an orchestra playing above the him and litter of the dome—that was the banquet. A surge, laughing, bustling crowd of young and oldโหรเดิน, keeping step more or less accurately to the more syncopated motives of the same orchestra—that was the dance.

Rev. Malcolm Treasurer

The high lights of the whole week-end were brought out by the after-dinner speeches, concluding by Rev. George Kenneth Marquis of Great Bay as custodian, who said, "the team was an honorable victory. The game was a fine exhibition of fair play on both sides."

Dr. Ffrancis, in his welcome address, echoed this idea. He also introduced the feature of the day that is a unique experience—turkeys are not transmuted—the solemnity itself absorbed upon being the idea. Dr. Ffrancis reminisced of his student days at Lawrence—-all "campus slain," "the sea over the Ffrancis," and "Glee-"

"This is the last chance I will get to hear you say," and Captain Lydke Blackmore, speaking of some of the students mentioned names. He asked the students to remember that the "Frisby" team made the equal what it was, and also reminded them that Gander was out at that game Thursday because of a broken leg which he had received fighting for Lawrence.

"Stand up for women's athletics!" was the idea of Elyna Jarrett, '24, who responded for the student body.

"We are not going to lose another game this year," said Coach A. C. Derry, speaking for himself and "Chuck" Buck, who was forced to be absent.

"Look at the situation Lawson was in with regard to athletics this fall, but the men from her team by graduation last spring. Five of them were all-star men and five of them played on the team for four years. Then the Franklin ruling went into effect, cutting out our material in the football outfit. Also, we had won three successive championships, and we had forgotten that we could be beaten. So Lawson beat us, but there was no reason for us to despair for Helmut had only one man from her team the last two years—the others were all junior and sophomores."

"The only expression of the highest expression of the most important musical event of the season..."
