Final Concert Is Climax To May Festival

The Lawrence Symphony Orchestra's final concert of the season was held on Monday evening, May 17, 1927, at the Memorial Auditorium. The program featured works by Mendelssohn, Grainger, and Schumann-Heink, among others.

The concert began with Mendelssohn's 'Heavenly Peace' overture, which was enthusiastically received by the audience. Following this, Grainger's 'Robin Hood and His Maid,' presented by a choir of 150 voices, was given under the direction of Miss Lucile Welty. The performance was well received by the audience.

Schumann-Heink's 'My Lady's Fantasy,' with soprano Helen Greenwood, was also featured. The singer's voice was praised for its beauty and purity, and the orchestra's accompaniment was noted as perfectly in style.

The final piece of the evening was the Schumann-Heink's 'The Young Lady's Maiden Song,' with soprano Ruth Hutchinson, and accompaniment by Mabel Ferguson. The performance ended with the audience standing and applauding.

After the concert, the orchestra members and performers were given a dinner at the home of Dr. G. E. Cast, 925 Chestnut Street. The event was a great success and marked the end of another season of the Lawrence Symphony Orchestra.

THE MUSIC FESTIVAL
The proof of a pudding is in the eating; the proof of the high caliber of our conservatory of music and its dean. Although the Festival was not directly sponsored by the conservatory, it is a positive fact that it could not have been the expensive music project it was without the assistance of conservatory faculty and students.

With a conservatory such as ours Appleton should eventually become the mecca of music lovers from all parts of the state. The Music Festival is the first step in this direction, and we sincerely hope the plans of its sponsors to make it an annual affair will be realized, and that sometime in the future the Appleton Music Festival will become an event of statewide interest.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?
What they would do if they could start college over again is a favorite topic for some men who have had an opportunity to attend college and then view the experience in retrospect.

Ten things in particular Dean Clark lists as what he would do if he could start college again. He would:
1. Develop concentration—work harder but not so long.
2. Learn to work while others are around.
3. Put more stress on learning how to get information than upon information itself.
4. Find more difficult tasks to do.
5. Learn to speak in public.
6. Learn to play some athletic game.
7. Learn to do one line of work particularly well.
8. Get more acquainted with instructors.
9. Take fewer courses which are strictly practical.
10. Have as an aim which would bring him into close touch with men.

Such expressions should be of great interest to those who are attending college now. Dean Clark admits that there is more to college than mere acquisition of some book learning—that other opportunities are offered which are of equal value. We agree with him.

Out of this he says that the "four big leaders" will live to see the day when they will regret that they did not take advantage of the many opportunities that are available to college students. Those who are in college merely because they feel that that is the easiest way to pass away the present time not only are a hindrance to other students but they are letting days slip by in such a manner that regrets are sure to follow a few years hence.

There is much to be gained by a college education. But the saddest part of that proposition is that so few students realize how much is to be gained.

I left at the house one night; and so began. Never was back, she called me up, and went. But I was sure—I didn’t want common property. She’s a sport a Big Chi pin, and carries on. Her game as slick as ever. Poor guy—who cares? He has her—needs to know his oil. Well, there. She is, I picked her snerser out last night.

The loyal mouth says it knows what (other the fashion of all informal communications) all references to persons are entirely fictitious. Anyway, it’s dues day.

Browning Through the Bookshelf
By GRACE HANNAGAN

The royal road to romance, by Richard Barnhill, Bobbs-Merrill—$4.50.

..."In which a gay young浪漫ist gives long thinking and dreaming his neglected corner of the world—as he sits on the other corner, and gives the phrase "very young journalist" quite Mr. Hallmark's delight rather than "gay young romanticism." It is essentially a gay young journal.

Holland explained to him his way around the world rather than accept a starched-doe de luxe from his parents as an present at his graduation from Princeton. Perhaps he was right. He avoided the conventional Greek toasts, and found attention by wild-goose-chasing from the point of originality by a wealthy American, a check from a travel agent, or kind fare, where he felt that way, at Monte Carlo.

The man was back in baggage carrying only his toiletttes, and his costume, which supported the many hours which illustrated his Notice. Re did tickets cause him much trouble. He got his passage by his feet, by standing on a merchant ship abroad, or driving home. It is true that his informal method of travel often got him into trouble. But then, his informality justified the expenses he did get to see the foreign juts.

It is no wonder that this sensational book has been popular. It is so unorthodox, so light, with its whisper oflength, width, and height. Impartially important of all, it is the story of what we have all wanted to do. It has the appeal of a project, the feeling of a lifetime swept over me. I had youth, the transitory, the fugitive, now amorphous and undefined. Let those who wish have their request—want of freedom, freedom to indulge in whatever caprice strike my fancy, freedom to search in the far remotest corners of the earth for the beautiful, the pleasant, and the rarest."

The title page definitely lacks all propriety with a dedication to his college friends, "Whose smiles, consuelo and respectability as Princeton graduates prove me to this book."
