College Play Given Before Full House

"You Never Can Tell" Reopens With Clever Lines and Glowing Reviews

The college dramatic society opened its season in the college playhouse "You Never Can Tell" by Victorien Sardou, which was produced by William J. Proctor, who was the director of the production. The play was repeated last year but this year the society has redone it in the spring to meet the demands of the audience. The play was given over a year ago, as part of the spring season, and was played to packed houses.

The play is set in the village of Chimay, in Belgium, and centers around a wealthy family, the Count de Saint-Pierre and his son, Charles. Charles is a young man who is engaged to be married to the Countess de Saint-Pierre, the daughter of the wealthy family. However, Charles falls in love with a young woman named Julie, who is the daughter of a贫穷 family. The play follows the twists and turns of the family as they try to keep their secrets hidden from each other.

The play was performed by an excellent cast of actors, who gave a wonderful performance. The actors were well rehearsed and their delivery was perfect. The play was directed with great precision and the set design was outstanding. The play was a great success and was repeated many times throughout the spring season.

The play was a wonderful example of the talent of the college dramatic society and it was a great way to start the season. The society has many more productions lined up for the rest of the season, and the audience can expect many more great shows to come.

So the average individual's mind is adverse criticism, and, if nothing disparaging can be found, the good is handed out way to mention it to the reporters. Usually, the first thing which hear anything about the few stories we were lucky enough to get out pulls a boner—mess up a chapel speech, get somebody's name wrong, in proper shape. There appears to be student self-expression and independent criticism of trustee control is not secure.

Unfortunately the sponsors of the city Y. M. C. A. do not appreciate what has happened to the collegiate Y. M. C. A. They do not like its "radical" ideas, and are constantly bemoaning financial shortages.

The struggle goes back to the changing character of the college which is being worked by the Y. M. C. A. Thus far the liberals have kept in the saddle, but their victory is not assured.

Liberal and reactionary forces are fighting a determined battle for the control of the collegiate Young Men's Christian Association. Public attention has not been focused upon the struggle because of the more spectacular rift between fundamentalists and modernists and the relatively public nature of the battles of the Y. M. C. A. Thus far the liberals have kept in the saddle, but their victory is not assured.
