Beggs Resigns Lawrentian Post

The competition has been idle all week following the Christmas holiday and will not resume until after the committee had made a decision on the matter.

Beggs is a member of the proposed merger of the Lawrentian staff during his freshman year. It was the first and only time the students have been actually and honestly riled up about something. Wonder if it will be tried again.

The Lawrence Board of Trustees has decided to increase tuition costs. As one of the leading colleges of liberal arts in the middle west, Lawrence has for a long time ranked near the bottom in terms of expenses. Now with the increased tuition an accepted fact, the College ranks thirteenth in total student costs in a survey of fifteen leading midwestern institutions.

With actual facts in hand, the committee appointed recently to bring in plans whereby the annual deficit might be eliminated, felt justified in recommending the increase in tuition as a partial reme­dial measure. It is significant that many colleges having higher tuition and board costs than those in force at Lawrence, are operating yearly with a deficit as great or greater than the one here. In these institutions, special gifts serve to wipe out the deficit each year. At Lawrence, the board of trustees has expressed itself as being against this policy. It is felt by the board that financial gifts should be put into something permanent in the line of educational value, rather than be used as an operating expenditure.

Paderewski Thrills Large Audience With Performance

Delilah Of Time In His Playing Was Outstanding Features Of Recital

By Helen Hester

With vigor for more honored that his advanced age would indicate, Leos Paderewski appeared in the Memorial Chapel, Tuesday evening before an audience which nearly filled the house. For more than two hours he was played, except for a five minute intermission, and played with such effect that the applause which followed every number could not be subdued even after three encores, and the audience stayed until the piano was closed and finally moved from the stage, while the concert was still acknowledged the tributes.

Even then the kindly smile welcomed the throng of admirers who remained after the concert to compliment him on his playing or, perhaps, to have a glimpse of the artist away from the tension of the concert stage.
