THE MAY FETE TOMORROW

There is perhaps no one to whom we at one time or another has not experienced the thrill and satisfaction of "crashing the gate," slipping under the canvas walls of the circus tent, or shooting the knothole in the fence around the baseball park. They are adventures usually associated with childhood and early adolescence, but they seem to have their carry over even among college people. There is no better evidence of this than the crowd which gathers each year outside the ropes entirling the scene of the May fete, those who for some inauspicious reason cannot find the small sum of twenty-five cents, which would enable them to sit in the blazers generally provided, when by their very presence they have shown that they wish to see the drama played there.

The May fete is one of Lawrence's oldest traditions. It is a pageant of beautiful color and music, a chance to make no great sense of appreciation to enjoy. It is presented for Lawrence students to enjoy, so it demands their appreciation of that fact for its success and continuation as a tradition. The least they can do is get admission to the blazers, rather than stain the ropes on the sides.

Nine Recitals Scheduled By Conservatory

Nine recitals are included in the calendar of the conservatory for the remainder of the year. These recitals include individual recitals by five students of Carl J. Waterman, two by students of Gladys Ives Brundage, and two student recitals.

Tonight at 8:30 three piano students of John Ross Frampton, will appear in junior voice recital. These recitals include individual recitals by five students of Carl J. Waterman, two by students of Gladys Ives Brundage, and two student recitals.
