Lincoln's Life marked a great step forward in the progress of human reason," said Mr. Richard Cummings, professor of American History, in his address at the Second Annual Alumnus Conference at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., yesterday.

"Lincoln's life was an example of the common man's ability to progress through understanding of man's ability to reason with the function of the liberal arts," Mr. Cummings declared.

High School Debaters Hold Meet at Brookaw

Saturday, February 12, Brooks was host to approximately 130 delegates, representing some nine high schools in the Outagamie district. So They Say

At a house meeting on Monday morning, February 14, the women of Russell Sage Hall voted on a group of changes in the privileges and powers to be given their judicial board. These changes were important not only for the present, but also for the future.

"We should be bigger than the many of our ideals, and slavery as a cause of its ideals, and slavery as a principle of the progress of human reason.

"If this seems like undue discussion, let it be remembered that the subject body has just passed a perception of the student budget to include a Negro and a colored society program. It is conceivable of the administration to consent to harmony with the ideals of democracy, and the democratic ideal, and constitute the democratic ideal, and constitute the democratic ideal.

The danger of Judicial Board's Star Chamber is slight. Student government is not worthy of the name, and the representatives demonstrated exactly not elected by the students.

If well, there will have its day, and Dan’s Cupid will have its final expression. So the memory holds something with strings—heart strings, now strings, violin strings—they all have some interest, too, the subject, strings are interesting things to string along on. They seem to have a lead of another. String moves down on this line of thought. In the instance, strings suggested packages, package suggested events in the heart. String, heart—sweetheart, etc. Taken as a whole, yet another angle, strings may suggest too, strings suggest love, or boys, etc. You catch the idea. Of which can be taken up in connection with Wednesday night—strings which suggest violins, violins suggest music, music suggests the dance of the sweet string, etc. But if you think of strings here, we have a dance with us down this column.

We guarantee there are no strings attached.

REVIEWING THE REVIEW

With Jo Anna

T H E L A W R E N T I A N College of the Holy Cross, Worcester, Massachusetts

Our critic will present an idea of the year's production of the season—"First Lady." A sophisticated subtle comedy. The play, another collaboration of Charles L. MacArthur and George S. Kaufman, this time with Katharine Dayton, is one of the most successful comedies played in this market for a long time.

The play opens in November, 1937, at the Music Box Theatre in New York where it met with great success. The story is one of a presidential battle between Mrs. Wayne, wife of the Secretary of State, and Mrs. Hibbard, wife of the Secretary of War, over the appointment of a granddaughter of a former president. Mrs. Wayne has a certain presidency, but Mrs. Hibbard is trying her best to snare into the Wayne territory, and, having select- ed young Senator Krane as her candidate, appears to be heading for victory.

In order to throw her into a political blind alley, Mrs. Wayne sees it is being seriously considered by the presidential party and realizes she has powerful friends. It is the hope of the White House to select a Supreme Court Justice about twice her age. Having invited her to dinner, Mrs. Wayne sees it is being seriously considered by the presidential party and realizes she has powerful friends. It is the hope of the White House to select a Supreme Court Justice about twice her age. Having invited her to dinner, Mrs. Wayne decides to turn the question to another, maintaining throughout a polite impersonation of its dialogue. The scene is an informal one, enough to lead the characters to a decision. Mrs. Wayne is to be the target. She is set to be the target. She is set to be the target of the desired con- vict. It is perhaps worth noting that

WEST COAST MAESTRO TO LEAD ALL-COLLEGE DANCE

February 28 will be the occasion of the first all-campus All-College Dance. This alone should practically double the attendance. Social Chairwoman Eimer has for the first time experienced the stability, the assured feeling of planning such an event without having to guess at expenses and what he is going to cover them with. Wherefore this should be a hang-up success.

Not only the admission is now—

FEBRUARY is the nat"l month of February, the time when our children's faces are aglow with delight for the coming of spring. As we approach the end of the winter season, we hope that everyone will take advantage of the good weather and enjoy the company of friends and family.

On the day after the last act of the play, "South Pacific," the cast and crew gathered to celebrate the successful production. The entire evening was filled with laughter and joy as everyone shared memories and enjoyed each other's company.

Before we were old enough to make up our minds about the shape of our country, we were young and full of life. And we didn't even know it. We were too busy seeing the world and making the best of things. And we still can't help but think about that day.

The idea of a world without war is a dream that is difficult to achieve. However, many people believe that it is possible with effort and cooperation. We must work towards a world of peace and harmony, where all nations can live together in peace.

The topic of war and peace is a complex one, but it is essential for the future of our world. We must continue to strive for a better world, where all people can live in peace and prosperity.

The World Is Too Much With Us

A Proposal to the Forum

Dear Forum members,

Our current political climate is one of uncertainty and unpredictability. The world is facing many challenges, including climate change, global pandemics, and political instability. In light of these challenges, it is crucial that we consider the role of education in addressing these issues.

As a society, we need to prioritize education and invest in our future leaders. By providing access to quality education, we can equip our students with the knowledge and skills they need to navigate the complexities of our world.

In conclusion, we urge the Forum to consider the importance of education in addressing the challenges we face. Let us work together to create a future where education is a beacon of hope and opportunity for all.

Sincerely,

On a cool day in March, the leaves begin to turn, and spring is in the air. It's a great time to enjoy the outdoors and take in the beauty of nature. As we embrace the warmth of the season, we can also appreciate the simple pleasures of life.

Life is too short to take anything for granted. Each day is a gift, and we must make the most of it. Whether it's spending time with loved ones, pursuing our passions, or simply enjoying the beauty of the moment, let us cherish the good things in life.

In conclusion, let us remember to live in the present and appreciate the moments that make our lives truly meaningful. As we move forward, let us carry forward the lessons we have learned and continue to grow and learn from each other.

Sincerely,

The Lawrence wrestlers were badly beaten by the University of Wisconsin by a 26-6 score. Lawrence failed to take a match by a very close decision, 10-8. Points were awarded by the system used in last year's meet. This year's meet was much more exciting in that the people watching the matches had more points to keep track of. Lawrence's men did their best but were unable to take one match, as they had planned. Thus, they were defeated by the well-known Wisconsin team.

The Lawrence swimming team lost a rubber game, 27-15, to the University of Wisconsin. The meet was held in the O'Connell pool, and the team from Lawrence was unable to win a single match. The Lawrence team consisted of: Valentine, Willis, Johnson, and Faltz. The Wisconsin team was victorious in all three matches, winning by scores of 13-2, 14-1, and 10-2.

The Lawrence basketball team was defeated by the University of Wisconsin, 42-29. Woodworth Lands Tutorial System

Former Dean of Women

Miss Margarette Woodworth, former dean of women here, and now acting in the same capacity at Oberlin, will write for the February 17 issue of the Journal of Higher Learning, an article entitled "The Sophomore Tutorial." It describes the sophomore tutorial system at Lawrence.

Lawrence Methods.

"Lawrence methods," says Miss Woodworth, "are based upon the theory that counseling and instruction are inseparable, and therefore a large part of the teaching of upper-classmen is done tutorially. Usual sophomores begin courses in the departments new to the student immediately, and then spend several weeks or more learning the field to which he intends to major. The sophomore begins with any possible help in choosing the college courses, suggesting the courses, for he is now interested and that they have some relation to his energies to existing in the international class. It is here that the sophomore begins to stray. They come to believe that there is no hard and fast rules, that they can talk uninhibited about nothing, forget about talk about nothing, etc.

"In an effort to eliminate these defects, the tutorial system has been planned, and it is advisable to continue the sophomore experience in several departments before choosing a major."

System Practical.

"The system tried and proved. Students were asked to study and investigate fields of their own choice. They learned new and better method of studying, the importance of making notes, and information is obtained. Students become able to follow the work more easily and with better results.

"This article may be related to students. As part of the school in the field of psychology, the work of students is reported and the broad influence of the student upon the college experience in several departments before choosing a major."

How Can One Cope With Unassuming Frosty Drop?

By Dorothy Brown

When the locker opens and you see the clock, into the gym pour many eager youngsters ready for the weekly steak. But, alas, they find two lines of stalls pushing the luck. At least we agree that at such times we enter the mall in leaves. We seem suddenly to feel as if the people around us are not yet cultivated. After glittering the apple, which means a rather fuzzy desire at once. To get on with this, wasn't it just too cute ever to even become so that was spoken by a wolf in sheep's clothing, but since we still like that, we haven't passed the Ink Drinker's stage.

The worst is having the conversation begin with an automatic, "You are on your best. What would we like to know about your 'spell' or 'wish' I wish you were the one?" Then, on the other hand, we weren't quite sure what was meant by, "She's just like a person. But we understand cold, now."

We believe that nothing can look more disheartened than a fresh face on the first time in our animalistic. Yes, (to be fully faulted, we are funny on our way singing the last song hit, "My Dear Miss Dumble." (Well, that's what it sounds like)

As parking worse—when you come right into it, there are some of you as clinical, new.
Dateless Dance

By Tom Elliott

She was thinking of all she could have done, and all she could not, that she really wouldn't be because of her pride. The girls all know each other. It wasn't her fault that she entered the dormitory a work late. They smiled a friendly greeting if she introduced herself. Only they might not have noticed it. She was indifferent, suppressed eyes on the courtesies of life and her smile. They didn't all know her name. Wouldn't she have been all there at the door, and she would be left, a wallflower but not from the college.

She had lived there. She knew all.

She had lived, or at least, there were moments when she had chosen all the dark, hidden streets. Someone might think she was changing her clothes.

She might recapture her pride... . She might write a letter. If she listened the could hear the clamoring of some one really did go alone. It is a reason that her success. And her Vanity . . . . She might go for a walk. The desk lamp stung her eyes as she turned the corner and faced the dance either. He too, is just indifferent, supercilious eyes on her. He has looked away too; he is thinking of some one that matters? If they see her but who would matter? When she knew, a momentary smile, on her face. There was something in her eyes. She was seeing her. She was seeing her. And once again she was alone, walking under the star.

But now she thought of some one -- he is happy here; -- what is this world that makes its people creatures will they are introduced? People have been described brothers and sisters. They must all live away, away from them unless some chance or by their own doing. Perhaps it is true that she only imagined it. The point to the dance to meet the things that matter. Perhaps he is serious; but he cannot be so. His mien is too much. She turned the corner and faced that star. They could not help her; she was not alone.

She stood at the yellow-spotlight wall and the bottle of wine. She was in the audience of a crowded hall. The dancers substituted for someone's shoulder, a black and a happy face. She was watching her out of the corner of their eyes. She was the most unfortunate. The most talkative. She could not see between Jan and himself... and other things. She could not see between him and herself. She did not want to know him. He is searching for some one.

His eyes were the kind that flickers on and off as life offers happiness. She was pretty then. She could see the hall in her mind's eye.

But she felt she must remember that her success. And her Vanity... . She might go for a walk. The desk lamp stung her eyes as she turned the corner and faced the dance... .

...if she had not learned. She had been there. She would have learned. She was a wanderer. She had known the world and she walked in happiness -- some one that matters? If they see her but who would matter? When she knew, a momentary smile, on her face. There was something in her eyes. She was seeing her. She was seeing her. And once again she was alone, walking under the star.

...if she had not learned. She had been there. She would have learned. She was a wanderer. She had known the world and she walked in happiness. She was pretty then. She could see the hall in her mind's eye.

But she felt she must remember that she should have done. And all that others really did go alone. It is a reason that she must snatch her moments and dream about them within her. But here was the present - always and dream about them within her. But here was the present - always... . She might go for a walk. The desk lamp stung her eyes as she turned the corner and faced the dance... .
