Brock felt very uneasy about the whole thing. He opened the door of the Place and crept in the back door compulsively. Immediately there was a sound of laughter.

"Look, someone," yelled Brock.

"They're creeping in unceremoniously," Brock got up off his knees. "I never touch anyone stronger than that girl's double-fudge malted." A slight gentleman embarrassment doesn't stop the things," he whispered. "They're creeping in unceremoniously," Brock glanced at his shoes. "You look too old for me, still." "Oh!" groaned the chief concern with laughter. "It's not just my own concern, is it?" "I do wish you wouldn't run so much," groaned a pair man making eye contact. "You have your past and you can move here and there now." "You mean bar you out," the irrepressible man said as he walked in a cylinder.

Cut System Meets Disapproval

A T THE beginning of the semester a new cut system was installed at Lawrence, a system which took away the opportunity for storing up grade points and allowed the student to earn a cut later on and put all students on an equal basis whether their grades are high or low. One-half the semester has passed, and the new system has had a fair trial. And it is generally agreed now that the student gets a free cut for every hour where he could take no cuts before; that the student need not be afraid of the cut system being used to make him study; that it makes little difference, for under either the old or the new system, when the student is not working at the job which gives him the cut, the job he is doing will determine his grade. In other words, he gets his cut; but it is a cut for every hour that he can take where he could take no cuts before. It is true that he may not be able to add it up to the total of five cuts for the year; and that it makes little difference, for under either the old or the new system, whether he saves his cuts with an eye to the future. But it is the student who keeps his grade consistently in the upper brackets who is objecting to the "free-cut" system—and who has a right to object. The senior who has had grades over a two-point average every year, every semester from the time he started college up until his senior year. He knew his senior year was to be his busiest, so he saved his grade points for that time when he would really need them. And he was right; he need only to discover that he has no opportunity to utilize these points which have been worked so hard for but which will have little or no value when he is up against the rest of the students regardless of the fact that his grades up until this point have been really quite high. The reason is simply that he saved his cuts with an eye to the future. It surely seems fair.

It is true that as recommended by some that the cut system be continued as it is for the first three classes, but that the seniors be allowed either unlimited free cuts or as many cuts as they could take under the old system—giving it in accordance with the number of grade points they have to space the cuts. It has been recommended for several reasons. First, the seniors need for the job. Second, their thesis and comprehensives besides the numerous papers which the senior must write for his regular classes. Third, by the time he reaches his last year in college the student should be able to judge when he is more important to go to class or to utilize that time to his advantage.

Something should be done about the cut system. If no better system can be found, I beg to go back to the old one.

Quotable Quotes

"Of all the professions, that of teacher most needs the full four years of liberal arts education. During these four years, more than a minimum of specific teacher training and the liberal arts in general take place. These are cornerstones of our efforts." New York University's Dean L. E. Hawkes believes education should be at the base of all future teachers' what to teach, not how to teach.

GRIN AND BEAR IT

By Lydie

T he position of Italy in the highly dynamic European conflict becomes more of a question daily. Since the beginning of the war, it has become expectedly assumed by those familiar with the part played by Italy in 1914-15 that the nation would attempt to repeat the same tactics, namely, to sit quietly until by being offered enough by one side or the other to induce her to enter. But comments from various quarters have lately tended to make the situation slightly more complicated; indeed, if we are to believe every report, we must inescapably conclude that some of these sources are a gem of misinformation. Or else that there is yet another concept of opinion in the Italian officialdom.

Latest report—to quote the Washington Merry-Go-Round—is that there is a definite rift between Mussolini and his son-in-law and foreign minister, Count Galeazzo Ciano. In the opinion of Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, co-authors of the column, Mussolini favors active cooperation with Germany. Due to its vast respect for Germany's military prowess and his feeling that the Rome-Berlin axis is natural and permanent, he is apparently determined to go along for the ride. On the other hand, it is said that Ciano believes with equal firmness that Italy should play much the same game as of old, that the Nazis never will win in the end, and that Italy should in the final test choose once again to join the Allies in England and France. Whether he is in favor of actually going to war for the Allied cause is apparently not clear, since he allegedly harbors fears that the anti-war Italian people may finally revolt if such a policy is adopt- ed. By that is meant, of course, that the Italian man-on-the-street is just as opposed any kind of military participation as the average American is supposed to be.

On the other hand, consider recent news reports emanating from the Italian press—though we are well aware that all utterances are official or at least not expressions of an opposite viewpoint. And not only is that true, but the general belief to which I refer was published in Ciano's own newspaper. Commented in the item was the following statement: "We formulate all our wishes for the success of German arms and join with Germany in assuring German soldiers who have fallen on Norwegian soil!"

Add to this pro-German, but not necessarily military pronouncement that he phrased in the same article in which it was issued to the Press, and it remains to be seen whether Italy is to remain out of the war, or whether and how she would enter as the opposite conclusion from what Messrs. Pearson and Allen would have us believe. Furthermore, the latter have said that certain members of the Italian legation in Washington make no effort to conceal their pro-Axis sentiment. Regardless of the conclusion that may draw from this welter of ideas—and one might wonder if some of the members of the Italian official dom as of old, that the Nazis never will win in the end, and that Italy should in the final test choose once again to join the Allies in England and France. Whether he is in favor of actually going to war for the Allied cause is apparently not clear, since he allegedly harbors fears that the anti-war Italian people may finally revolt if such a policy is adopted. By that is meant, of course, that the Italian man-on-the-street is just as opposed any kind of military participation as the average American is supposed to be.

To the Allies, Italy's attitude is important, not so much from the standpoint of her—in the trenches as from a consideration of her strategic position. With Italy in the open, the side of Britain and France, the latter would have on her line a definite Axis power, namely the Brenner Pass—not extremely far fortified—also a real potential hold on the Mediterranean and Mediterranean Sea. In the last analysis, Italy will prob-

Denney Enters Men in Individual Events and 3 Relay Teams

The northwestern Beloit Relay will be held at the Beloit college track on Thursday. The meet will be held at 4:30 p.m. and three relay teams will run with three relay teams. Two freshmen relay teams will also run even though their points will not be counted in compiling team scores.

Vince Jones will probably be the Viking's outstanding man. He will seriously threaten the standing relay records. The track team is the largest track team in the conference this year and many of the men on the squad will be run by men picked from the following group: Cape, Buesing, Lockery, and Miller. If Ken Buesing is in the team for one year. Another player taken from the Kenosha team was purchased outright from the Kenosha pro-football team by the new Milwaukee team which is a member of the new American Professional Football League. A few other Lawrence friends are connected with the new Milwaukee team. "Tiny" Cahoon, former Green Bay and Monmouth college coach and athletic director, has been signed again to coach the team."

Talking about Art Buck leads to a "paining" feeling over the fine showing of the track team. There were some real surprises last Saturday. Finely choosing in the hundred yard dash, Sattizahn, second in the 220, Jones showing in the field events, Orwig showing in the fine showing of the whole team. The excitement which was feared for dual meets appears to have been overcome in the last few months. With the development of several outstanding athletes to fill out the team, the future looks bright for the track team.

A letter received this week by the Lawrence student body states that the accuracy of a statement made on the sports page. Quoting from this letter, "I think that the something will substantiate my memory that it is one thing to run for 10 seconds too long at one time. Delta Tau Delta last year two times to the confidence of their manager. Since but one fraternity managed to win more than one game from the faculty team during league competition, there are some precautions to state that Delta Tau Delta was undefeated and that it was awarded the championship." The letter went on to say that trouble is being suffered by the standings, including for the faculty games in the standings. This is the outcome:

White Outscores Blues With Help Of Coach Dillon

Intersquad Game L-Wind-up of Spring Football Drills

An old hand at the game made the difference between defeat and victory. After losing the first half of the game, the field was ceded to the blue clad gridmen, who Coach Dillon made his entrance. They started a short drive to their first touchdown. A fumble by Dick Meyers gave the blue eleven, their white clad opponents sparked by the passing of the old hand, time to strike. They scored and the score was 31-13 for the Whites.

The thing that has impressed me about the players as a group, I must sincerely must praise some of them individually. Take for instance, Clyde Rhodes at left half. He turned in some fine work on the game, for he played his hardest every minute he was in there, and he turned in some fine work on the scoring of points and in running the ball. Meyers made five on a big center plunge, and from here Ade Dillon carried it over on an off tackle smash. This gave the Whites a lead that they never relinquished.

During the third quarter the Whites scored two more touchdowns after pass interceptions to make the score 38-13 for the Blues.

The lineups were: Ade Dillon, first team quarterback. Harold Heselton, left tackle; and Ramon and Smith, who were injured, and Florin and Lingle will all be out there next fall. Prospects certainly look bright.

Gresh Trackmen May Show Well at Beloit
The freshman track team had a practice meet Tuesday afternoon at the Alexander gymnasium. Jim Fawcett walked off with four first places again. Jim Blaum and Ed Hadson finished one-two in the mile run, and Ben Ewers led all the way in winning the 1600. The freshmen are working hard and hope to make a showing in the Beloit relays.

The game and that certainly goes a long way toward making a winning team.

If analyzing the factors which have made this such an outstanding book of the season, a part of the explanation of its success will be found in the literary and dramatic qualities of the novel. Miss Fontaine, whose roles have been largely those of noble and refined women, will need skill and imagination to bring off the part of Mrs. de Winter. Nevertheless, the novel is based on a story which is capable of adaptation to the screen, and Miss Fontaine's ability to bring out the emotion of a character should help to make it a success. The novel is a study of the relationship between a man and a woman, and the way in which their feelings are revealed through their actions and words. The atmosphere of the novel is intense and dramatic, and it is likely to be well received by those who enjoy such stories. The novel is a true reflection of the author's genius and her ability to create a world of her own. The author has a great gift for creating atmosphere and mood, and she uses this gift to good effect in this novel. The novel is a masterpiece of the romantic genre, and it is likely to be widely read and loved. The novel is a true reflection of the author's genius and her ability to create a world of her own.
