Franklin Delano Roosevelt died knowing that our wars had been won, knowing that plans for a permanent peace would be made in the immediate future. But he was not satisfied with best to preserve, protect, and defend the government over the next century, and all its achievements of the last century. Roosevelt knew that we would be more and more sure that the man at the front, not the man in the rear, would find the soldier is as courageously, so valiantly, so surely.

We Americans who are still alive today are not the nation and not the government that our Constitution and our laws and our right to the heritage of representative government. -by the spirit of trustfulness and the willingness to work together, and by maintaining a vision of the kind of world free men can sometime reach.

Short Plays Presented

The Lawrence theater group gave another excellent presentation last Friday night. They presented two plays: "The Workhouse Ward" by Lady Gregory, and "The Valiant" by Halfway Hall and Robert Midditron.

The first play, directed by John Schramm depicted the "fighting spirit" of the Irish. It was the story of two friendly enemies who enjoyed their quarreling as true Irishmen. Taking part in this play were John Hockey, David Jones, and Patrick Weller.

The second play, "The Valiant" was coached by Gloria Enger. The scene covers the last few hours of the life of a condemned man of unknown identity. The performers lived their parts so well that the audience was carried away completely. David McDonald gave the outstanding performance of the evening in the part of the prisoner. Others in the cast were John Pym, Diane Dy- mek, and George Gertz.

Another war-time baseball season got underway this week as the nation mourned the death of one of the greatest American sports heroes. The late F. B. "Connie" Mack of the New York Giants was probably the most beloved of all the great baseball managers. His knowledge of the game was so thorough that even to this day he is regarded as one of the best baseball writers ever. The phrase "Connie Mack's baseball" is still used to this day.
