We have a question. It's an awful woiching question — the policy of the fraternity's, the virtues of the unreasonably unempted minds to a process known as intellectual development. And as a supplement to the above, the standards and sororities have tutoring classes, hours at the library, aiming for grade point average, test files, and initiation eligibility standards. The courses are based on grade averages, as well as the bull sessions, parties, dances and, of course, the unique room mates. Some groups even have an overpowering threat of depriving of a privilege of being treated for a group's uniqueness if grades are consistently too low.
