Vik's Beat Monmouth, 14-0

The Lawrence College football season took a new turn last Saturday when the Monmouth Scots were the first of a small Dad's Day crowd in winning, the score 14-0. It was their first win of the year, and the first in their annual Dad's Day game. The game was a close one, and certainly didn't cooperate as a steady rain, making the gridiron slippery and the ball wet. But the overcast sky, light rain and mud failed to dampen the spirits of the fired-up Viks as they lined up for the opening kickoff.

In the second half, the battle see-sawed back and forth with Monmouth gaining 148 total yards to 158 for Lawrence. The Monmouth offense gained 41 total yards to 118 for the Viks, and the Viks backs handled the highly mobile passing attack of the Scots, and the Viks backs had trouble handling an 80-yard field.

Lawrence opened the scoring in the second quarter when Gary Stewart scored from the 1 yard after a 41 yard assault. Jim Schuler's PAT place kick was wide. The Viks lead 6-0.

Tom Hurvis - Records Impressions of Spain

By TOM HURVIS

When I arrived in Spain this summer, I dreaded returning to the United States where I would be asked many times, "What do you think of Spain?" I was rather nervous about it. I could tell you about the monuments such as those of Cervantes, Franco, Jose Antonio, and Umana, the Valley of the Fallen, the Prado, the Paseo del Prado in Madrid but these things had not been important to me.

After the first two weeks of running around with my camera, trying to see everything and do everything like the typical American tourist, I had had enough of sightseeing. I settled down in my capacity as a student and tried to live the life of the people. By observing and talking with all types of people, I came to know the living conditions, the habits, and the opinions of the Spanish.

I was impressed immediately by the friendliness and politeness displayed by the Spaniards. It was unusual for a person to wait ten minutes to tell me where a location was when I stopped him on the street. He would have to repeat the directions four or five times before I would understand, but not in a rude or impatient way. They presented a picture of people earning their living and talking volubly in an effort to get their points across.

Spain generally consists of two distinct classes, the wealthy and the very poor. The upper class is dominated by the Catholic Church which has most of the wealth. It is comprised of old aristocratic families and government officials of which there is a great over-abundance in the capital city of Madrid.

Doemland, Schmidt, Press ‘Profile’

What happens when four fellows get together and decide to make a record? In the case of Ed Doemland, Arnie Jarecves, Ed Burmeister and K. T. Kitchin the result was “a new experience in high fidelity” featuring “unique stylings in jazz melodies” entitled Windy City Prole.

Because these four radio alumni from Maine Township High School in Illinois are interested in the field of sound engineering, they decided it would be an interesting experiment to make a record.

After a great deal of research they convinced their fathers and a number of friends to let them use money for this experiment and thus received a charter from the state of Illinois and acquired two thousand shares of stock. The company was called Great Rivers Recording Corporation, and the record was recorded in the RCA studio in Chicago last August. The record features a five member group called the Kilde Le Quiet. Included are: Ed Doemland, a senior here at Lawrence, on position A, a guitarist; Karl Schmidt, also a senior at Lawrence, on drums and also accordion; Al Bonde, a graduate of Loyola on piano; J. M. Jakub, who is now teaching at Maine Township and New Trier High Schools, on percussion; and Wayne Robbins, now on the music staff at Maine Township High School on base violin.

Among the numbers on the record are two original compositions from the symphony which is being written by Ed Doemland. They are: “Frenzy”, one of his sketches from the third movement, and “Allegro”, one of the themes from the first movement. “Frenzy” or “Finger’s Ring” is an original by Bonde, named after the all-school dance held here at Lawrence. The full list of numbers is as follows:

Slim B-Ball Turnout May Mean "Another One of Those Years"

By JOHN ROSS

Raiders played a team sport requiring, at the bare minimum, five men. A school should have at least a dozen to guard against the most ambitious start-ners becoming tired, and also to conduct useful practices. Lawrence does not have that advantage. The varsity basketball practices started two weeks ago, and thus the team was not expected to be in peak condition for a practice that has been four. With the conclusion of the basketball season this week-end, five more candidates will be available to Coach Don Boys, dammed to say the least, for that the material he has to work with this year is better, in quality, than that available at the start of the last season, when Lawrence players piled up an unassuming 2 and 17 record. Although the athetes are becoming stronger, Lawrence has several important handicaps.

TWO HANDICAPS

First among these is the lack of experienced players. All of the other conference schools, which also consider the size of the program, have far fewer men on their rosters. Lawrence has a roster of twenty-five, an edition far smaller than the thirty or forty that other schools will be able to field this season. Lawrence will probably be able to field a team that will be competitive against schools of its size, but it will be a team that will be forced to rely upon the younger men for leadership.

Secondly, the majority of the Lawrence basketball team are untried sophomores. As mentioned previously, the Lawrence basketball season is not going to be very interesting. This places the load of leadership on the sophomores. The team needs some experienced players to help Lawrence this year. Only three of the sophomores, guard John Koss, guard Bob Blust, and guard Frank Blocher, have played in varsity basketball, but they have been valuable in practice and have shown that they are able to contribute.

Even with these handicaps, the team is better than the team of last season. The three men who have departed from last year's team have been replaced by three men who will probably increase the team's chances of success. The team is probably five men better than the team was last year. The Lawrence basketball team is not going to be a team that is going to win many games, but it is going to be a team that will be competitive against other teams of its size.

Weinstein Speaks to freshmen on Plato
"The Major Aspects of Plato's Philosophy" was the topic of this week's Freshmen Studies lecture, Dr. Julius Weinstein, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Wisconsin.

Dr. Weinstein commented that Plato has influenced philosophers throughout the ages, from early Christian mysticism to the 19th century philosophy of Karl Marx and other.

Speaking of the condition of philosophy in Plato's day, he said that there was a failure of philosophers to give an accurate account of the physical world. Also, there was widespread skepticism and even hatred of reason. However, skepticism went beyond knowledge itself. Plato replied to this with his conception of archetypes.

Plato believed all that knowledge is recollection, that the soul had a life before its birth in the human body when it knew everything and that birth is a process of forgetting that knowledge. From this he went on to state that the soul is not in itself a remembering of the knowledge forgotten at birth.

Another of Plato's famous doctrines, Dr. Weinstein pointed out, was that of the Good, the Good being both an end in itself and a cause of all. A third and equally famous Phaedo doctrine is that of the soul, in which he postulates that from the

by DICK YOUNG

Since September, when the now famous kiosk was first taking shape, student interest has been focused on its progress. With the addition of two benches and a trash disposal to the kiosk area, the project is nearing completion. In order to answer some of the many questions about the kiosk's construction, the LAWRENTIAN interviewed Mr. Harlan Kirk, Lawrence's Business Manager.

According to Mr. Kirk, the kiosk was designed by Mr. Charles Brooks of the Art Department to serve a practical purpose and to add to the beauty of the campus. In keeping with the general architecture of the school, the kiosk contains such features as a Laminated Main House and a side door. From the kiosk's 4-foot foundation was required.

The long delay in finishing the project was due mainly to the late arrival of materials for the benches. Mr. Kirk estimated the cost of construction at approximately $1000.

DEAN CAMERON PRESENTS DEFERRED RUSH PLAN TO IFC

Prompted by concerns expressed by students and by the administration, Dean Cameron presented a deferred rush plan to the Inter- fraternity Council. Currently, the plan is being considered and it is hoped that a decision will be reached soon.

Changing the old system of rush to deferred rush would allow interested students to be exposed to the fraternities without the pressure of immediate commitment. The plan is also designed to prevent hazing and discrimination among students.

INTER-FRATERNITY COUNCIL

The Inter-fraternity Council re-affirmed its opposition to deferred rush plans and expressed its support for the current system of rush. The council feels that deferred rush would create a less desirable atmosphere for new members.

One objection to deferred rush was mentioned by a few groups. It would be too difficult for the smaller groups to compete with the larger organizations. Dean Cameron expressed that the large groups do not have the time to prepare for a deferred rush plan.

In addition, deferred rush would prevent the freshmen from gaining guidance when they most needed it — at the beginning of their first year. However, one group stated that this was not an issue and that their national organization was inclined towards deferred rush.

Dean Cameron felt that if anyone could be sure that this guidance and interest in the freshmen mentioned above would be maintained by a deferred rush plan, he would wholeheartedly support it.

Army Air Force. He was especially impressed with the caliber of the students here, as well as the fine reception given me by both the students and the faculty. Colonel Betz was once again transferred to the Air University at Maxwell Field, Montgomery, Ala., where he worked under the Air Research and Development Command, studying the brain-washing techniques used by the Communist forces on prisoners of war during the Korean conflict.

Just prior to coming to Lawrence, Col. Betz was attached to the office of the Deputy Chief of Staff on Intelligence at O.S.S. Headquarters in Washington, D.C. His function there was determined by President Truman's order to "dig up" the facts regarding the development of the atomic bomb.

After such a diversified and liberallyinding past, one would wonder whether Col. Betz could be happy with his relations with us, with his duties. However, he is estimably prepared for P.A.D. work. In fact, he stated that this is the type of school which he would have liked to attend. Along with his praise of "the development of the individual," he pointed to the intelligence of the students who attended Lawrence.

One might add that this attitude in itself reflects the kind of sincerity and other personal qualities which one might expect from a P.A.D. who has had such an interesting background in air force education.

think now, apply later

The Graduate School Grind

Prof. William Chaney has suggested that perhaps college students overlook U. S. graduate study opportunities because of the foreign equivalence barrier between the United States and foreign universities. He has pointed out that this is the type of school which he would have liked to attend Lawrence.

Among other factors in applying for financial aid, planning became one of the most important. Prof. Chaney emphasized that to plan early is necessary to make them regular—or, in other words, not scattered. When it comes to planning, one should not forget that when applying for scholarships to further one's education, it is necessary to maintain an average, and to have taken the courses which the school one wishes to be admitted to requires. Due to these general requirements, one should indicate that the major difference among the various scholarship and assistantship programs is as much variation along the minor differentiations, scholar and assistant. There are many students who plan to plan early and to plan for the purpose of obtaining foreign scholarships. For this reason, foreign scholarship programs should be noted by freemakers, and it is too early for them to start thinking about scholarship programs.

Talking with several seniors who have applied for graduate study scholarships, one gets the impression that during the period beginning shortly after returning to college as seniors (usually) until the end of October there are many students who have a very short time, often applying for several scholarships and, of course, to a number of graduate schools. Invited to the summer at application for scholarships are usually filled in forms, often in quadruplicate; writing autobiographies; outlining detailed plans of proposed study; and attending to correspondence. Besides this, there are other, pictures to send in, and often three or four letters of recommendation to be written to faculty members; the number of test scores which may be required by different schools to a testing center; Of course, at a foreign study scholarship embraces a greater amount of planning and need for foreign study for study in the United States. These and other tasks add up to make a very busy first quarter schedule.

One of the senior applicants, a member of the Rhodes scholarships, gave two reasons for foreign study. First, to study under a different philosophy, and to look for opportunities different from those in the United States. Secondly, and as-off-stated, to improve foreign relations, there are dozens of scholarships available. Of greatest interest, perhaps, are Rhodes and Fulbright scholarships, both of which cover practically all necessary expenses. The Rhodes scholarships are for two years of study with a possible extension grant, while Fulbright grants are generally for one year.

While foreign study carries a lot of prestige and often helps to increase world understand(

campus comment

Laurence was asked last Monday night to join the National Student Association (NSA), and the request was turned down (see SEC article on another page). This, in my opinion, was as it should be. Lawrence has no real need for NSA—we have the necessary machinery, just under our noses, if we only make use of it.

There is, whether many of us are aware of it or not, an existing machinery of the Midwest Conference known as the MSCGA (translation irrelevancies). This machinery meets twice each year to organize the several campuses to discuss problems common to the several campuses (or so it says in the book). What actually happens is that the MSCGA handles only problems common to all student government Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Treasurers, New Student President of nations.

It all boils down to the fact that the MSCGA has the potential, if not the inclination to discuss important problems common to ten different campuses, rather than how to finance next month’s big concert. This, I hope, may join NSA, when we can make our own MSCGA into something worthwhile. (And besides, the latter doesn’t bring in $200 a month.)

The failure of the Constitutional Revisions to cancel the predetermined two-day canvass is dealt with by the SEC President in his weekly column. On that score, I commend sentiments to him and say I agree it’s a pity that three hundred students did not see fit to vote.

In a slightly different vein, though, I can’t help but wonder what the SEC Constitution (which was not included among the ill-fated revisions) if we are ever to go on with the SEC constitution, then it’s necessary to make it possible for two-thirds of the students voting to effect changes, the voting is made by the students, and interested students are what comprises the SEC constitution. In any case, something to the effect of the three students who offered their service to the SEC constitution, to mention the big disgracefulness in the present Student Executive Council which could have been avoided if the proposed constitutional revision to bring about some small body for approval or disapproval.

It would have been so disheartening had the proposal been kilometred, but well over ninety percent of the students who voted, however, as you probably know, we voted with the SEC constitution, not because we didn’t care to vote, but instead sixty percent of those who voted.

Because of this dismaying statistic, some questions will naturally come to mind, such as on Monday, at the meeting, Monday night;

1. should we go on and try to continue attempting the absolute perfection of the government, if need be, and hopefully that the SEC constitution is no enough students will be responsible enough to vote on one or another?

2. should we attempt to change the SEC constitution, which states that we must have a two-thirds vote of the student body in order is amended?

3. Should we forget about the SEC constitution entirely because not enough students are voting, whatever its vote is in favor of or against the others.

Notice, even though they appeared in the LAWRENTIA, should be posted all over campus, and if necessary Sunday (as it was), many illiterate students weren’t aware that there was to be a vote at all.

The next time we try to amend the constitution, I think all of us—SEC, Board, Committee, and students should get behind it.

last week-end’s football game proved something to me. Lawrence is not as weak a team as they might have expected to beat, when the Vikings face them tomorrow in Northfield.

Basketball, according to the story elsewhere in this issue under the by-line of John Ross, may be suffering a worse fate than the gridlockers have. There are some students who, by all rights, should be practicing basketball; they have been eliminated (or have eliminated themselves) because of academic and financial problems.

It might be noted, in passing, that Don Boy's problem is also a vital one for Gene Davis (swimming) and Bertie Hewell (wrestling) as they try to prepare for the winter sports season.

The Kiok Development Project is just about wonky, though, so that he can't go to work, and on this point, it might be noted that the Kiok has a pretty set pattern for his work, and expounds them to others.

The crux of this matter as far as I can see is that you have within your major field, give a strong reason for why you can. The college student expects to find in college a preprofessional curriculum, and many juniors and seniors majoring in diversified areas, may prove to illuminate the fact why you have taken the courses you have within your major field. Or why you think you can.

The college student expects to fit in class, take notes, examen and papers in the following semester. A host of his instructors are supposed to perpetuate this training in the modern academic life, as in mental life, is the foundation for all, to realize the effort of active participation.

Our average student seems to look on college as a necessary "waiting period" in life. To him college was one of the logical steps of his career, which he has been exposed to at university because he heard that a degree was a sure asset accepted as an adult in the business and social world. Advantages.

It doesn’t matter too much what the degree itself stands for, probably that, an essay is not required to an essay once doesn’t care what the degree is. As long as it’s definitely the place where America stand and seems to be an easy subject to be made.

The student, when he gets here, isn’t, shouldn’t be surprising. Unless he comes to college with a preformulated curriculum, he is not too interested in most of what he takes. Most of the times is "trying to find a field that is interesting to him," so many varied courses are given under the same, but finally ends up on a major field that has some personal interest to him. He accepts the interests of others in choosing the "popular major," such as Economics or History, but achieve, does he.
